My Probe 3 software is running in full screen mode. How do I take Probe out of full screen mode? I have read the Probe manual and looked in the Probe menus, and I can't remember how I got to full screen mode in the first place!

Thanks.

"Worthless and Unneeded"? That was NOT the question!! Learn to answer the question! READ THE SUBJECT LINE.

No one asked whether it is useful, it absolutely is, the question is: is it "keeping good people out of ham radio?"

NOPE!!!

probe 3 runs in DOS doesn't it ? ........ in dos you can " alt-tab " to different programs running but NOT have several screens of different programs  displayed at the same time ... as when in the windows environment !

asking to take a DOS level program out of full screen mode would only be  needed when you need a " command line "  level operation while the program is operating ..... most programs that need a " command line " during dos operation have a provision for that !

not sure what you are asking here ?? ...........

More info:

I'm running Probe 5 from Win98 (I had the Probe version info wrong in my original post).

Running Probe from the MS-DOS prompt, there is a Windows Full Screen icon at the top of the window, between the Paste and Properties icons. Once toggled to full screen, how do I toggle back? The full screen Probe hides other apps, like Unitrunker, and Uniscope, that I want to monitor while browsing frequencies.

Thanks for your response, Krackula. I enjoy your posts.

Yes it is, and the best scanner that I've ever had. I have about 850 aircraft freq. programmed in it and it seems that there is constant chatter going on all the time. I particularly enjoy listening to the crews of the C-130s (flying in groups of 3 or 4 planes) talking between the planes. They get pretty "wild" at times.

Eliminating CW will let in more people like 'Mark in the Dark'. That won't be good for the rest of us if we enjoy having good intelligent QSO's.

I was there the first night we were allowed to operate below 3800, worked an EA. Lotta ticked off VEs, Helluva mess. Lotta fun.

You're almost 40 years late. The precedent was carved in stone as a result of the Incentive Licensing R&Os of the late 1960s and they just did it again. I'm not familiar with the 'wayback history of it but maybe there were similar occurrences before 1950.

That sort of stuff is handled by the upper-level politically sensitive types at the FCC, our fates are crafted by the OET jorneymen. The BPL flap excepted.

FCC . . Golden days . . heh.

Who audits this process to make sure they all get "equal reads" and consideration? Where's the published policies on the topic? Answer:
There ain't neither. You can fill in the rest.

You're the local manager of the FCC group which totes up the comments on ham radio NPRMs, you also have a budget and a calander to manage and you know you gotta plow through the piles of comments in as efficient a maner as you can. Ordinary common sense and business smarts indicate that you'll pass out some informal set of criteria or another about who's comments to spend serious time on and who's to just give a quick scan and toss into the "agree"or "disagree" stacks with all sorts of variations in between. Considering the fact that Anderson's only inputs to the process have been a stream of workload for them from a non-ham bush-leaguer it wouldn't surprise me if they also had a stack for his drivel marked "cranks". Ten second scan, done, flick, into the stack it goes.

(a) They're toying with us for jollies.
(b) They know it doesn't matter one way or another.
(c) They're internally deadlocked on the subject just like we are.
(d) It'll show up in Omnibus II.

Ya know, The more I read SC's post the more respect I have for SC. He's right. Trash like "John" and the "retarded no-code wonder" are what will rid the bands of the ARS.

Maybe Mork should clean up his act and try to behave a little more like Steve.

John, the truth is if you talked to SC in person you'd drop to your knees trying to kiss his ass. You're a typical welfare ham. Now go play

The true truth is you have nothing to offer for entertainment by being a truly malicious asshole. Prove me I am wrong, if you can.

The anonymous "Ray" in the article is actually your typical 50 year old San Francisco Bay area 'social activist'/'progressive'/anarchist by the name of Gary Sellani, operator of the lazygranch.com domain and HAM radio call KD6ZXF.

Contact Gary at yahoogroups@lazygranch.com

It's very amusing, based on the subject of the article & his involvement in it, that Gary Sellani wanted to remain anonymous & just be referred to as "Ray."   It was easy enough to 'out' Gary Sellani by doing a Google search.

Maybe someone will go hang out near a particular San Ramon Post Office & photograph Gary Sellani's antenna-laden SUV as he stops to check his PO Box & post the photos of him & his vehicle on the internet. Be sure to get a photo of his SUV's tailcod... oops, I mean license plate. Then again, maybe someone has already done this...

Turn-about is fair-play, "Ray!"

quite sufficient

The journalism looks kinda dubious... I don't know much about U2's, but I do know they climb at a 40 to 60 degree angle-- which doesnt match with what the article and Ray claim.

Why?  Do you fear us working out of band Frenchmen?  We could do that just as well on 6 Meters.

Robesin is absent. Lots of uniques showing up. Maybe we need to run RRAP through a contest logging program.

The point is that since 1969 they haven't.

Not one that I know of since the inception of the ABC system.

Maybe. If ya think BPL isn't political, ya haven't been paying attention.

They do read all of the comments. What they conclude is another matter.

Bingo. Particularly if there's nothing new in the 200+ pages of comments and reply comments from one person!

They gotta read 'em. Doesn't mean they gotta agree with 'em or act on 'em.

Not my problem. Not yours, either.

Just to show what FCC has to put up with and why they might be a little ticked...

Not trolling anybody. Besides, have you submitted hundreds of pages?

I'd say (a) and (b), plus a bit of

(e) They are ticked off at the 18 petitions, lack of consensus and mountains of commentary.

I'm not saying it'll ever happen, just that it explains why it takes so long to get anything from FCC and why the result is so unlike what is proposed.

Indeed we could dispense with much of the technical qualifications some day. The technical part is basically an attempt to make sure the amatuer is competent enough to operate their equipment in a maner that does not interfere with other services outside of his designated allocation of spectrum, in other words, within FCC regulations. At such a time when all equipment is made idiot proof and all hams use store bought idiot proofed gear we may see this.So far the one experiment at this has failed. You think you have something idiot proof and then guess what, someone makes a better idiot. So I am not worried about requirement of theory going away. As far a CW is concerned to gain the privledges hams have today they had to show they were a national asset. Part of being that asset was our ability to process emergency traffic should the need arrive. At the time CW was needed to accomplish this. It is no longer needed to meet our obligation of service. OF course this begs the question, can we fullfil our obligation. To this I believe we can, but are we really needed. CW has been replaced by other technologies, it would make more sense to require typing skills than CW, an idea I dont think is so bad even though I may have trouble with twenty wpm on a keyboard.

Total agreement here, our obligation of service to to earn our privlegdes doesnt end with what we have done but with what we have done lately.

The "service" provided by the Amateur Radio Service is a service provided by the federal government to the citizens who meet the amateur radio licensing requirements. There is no governmental requirement or obligation that amateur radio operators render any public service at all. Amateur radio licensees are not even required to own a radio.

"Service", in this context, is just an administrative division of government.

I passed the Novice exam in Nov 1986.  5WPM.  I'm presently a General, so I'm fully qualified to work out of band Frenchmen on 6M or on HF.
Maybe they'll even put me in for the ARRL's A-1 Operator Club.

Mike,

I have been using ScanControl by 3D Technologies latest ver. 5.2.3 on my BC296D and is a great program and easy to learn. I believe they offer a free trial download and if you purchase well worth the $$$.

Highly unlikely particulary in cases like Anderson's nonsense and I'll only believe it when I see it. Unless you gots documentation to the contrary or you've been there yourself.

Yeah, they conclude on sight that they're not gonna actually read his

I doubt that there's much (e) involved, they've been patrolling up and down our back road in the RF wilderness for decades and they're quite used to it. Used to us and our level of noisy BS. In any event thee and me are bulletproof, we're 20WPM Extras so I could care less when they bite the bullet and do whatever they're gonna do about the code test.

'Course I thought I was bulletproof in 1967 too when I had a General .

Eternity is not a particulary long time in gummint buracracies like the FCC. Been there, been part of it.

> and why the result is so unlike what is . . . "Mother knows best" . . .

Somebody wrote in a post in QRZ.com that they'd been in direct e-mail contact with the FCC about the anomalies and confusion in the R&O and the FCC agreed that the R&O needs more work before it goes to the Register. That'll push implemetation of a cleaned-up version out until God knows when. Reset: Game started over.

I noticed in another of your posts that you didn't understand why the 80M CW band and 75M phone band are called what they are. Or something akin to that. It's an ancient convention which is conceptually useful in a number of ways and is not even close to "numerically rigorous". It's a simplistic way of identifying the ham bands and nothing more.

The real numbers go like this:

3.5 Mhz = 86M
3.75 Mhz = 80M
3.8M hz = 79M
4.0 Mhz = 75M
7.0 Mhz = 42.8M
7.5 Mhz = 40M
14 Mhz = 21.4M
15 Mhz = 20M

. . all I care about is that when I punch the button which sez "80" I hear a lotta beeping going on and when I hit the button marked "75" it's the motormouths at play . .

1) You have to understand that the U-2 is a bogey-man to the certain denizens of the Left

"Gsrsh, Martha, it be a SPYPLANE !!"

No just a very specialized recon aircraft -clearl;y marked as USAF for many years

2) It sure hurts the story if you have to say, "No just another C-17"

3) Ever since Truman Capote's "In Cold Blood" set the style, the so called "new Journalsim., wherer authors have been mixing fact with "what should have heppened" .....well, if we didn't spot a U-2 today, "Ray" says he has in the past, so I can inject it into the story

"In Cold Blood (1965), his account of a mass murder in Kansas, is what Capote called a "nonfiction novel," a book that employs the conventions of fiction to tell a true story. Thanks to this book, Capote has come to be considered one of the pioneers of a movement that Tom Wolfe would later call "New Journalism."

What's so good about that? What don't you Ten-Niners try to have a contest to see who can put out a really good signal? or is that to much work?

New Hams just don't want to modernize, they're lazy and don't want to have to learn anything.  I'm a 20 wpm Extra and the code requirement didn't stop me from modernizing beyond a microphone and CW.   So don't believe anyone that says CW is killing ham radio.  They're just sick, lame or Lazy.

He's upset because he knows CW makes a valuable ham, and he couldn't cut it. That's OK, I encouraged him to at least try to learn CW while I could before I ended up in his killfilters...

If CW has been replaced by other technologies, why aren't more amateurs doing the modernized modes? It's because they don't want too. Ham radio has been dumbed down and we can't even force hams to use them to be proficient communicators.

CW isn't preventing the modernization of ham radio, Laziness is.

Yer missing the point.

Somebody at FCC reads 'em. That's all.

My guess is that the FCC doesn't even start reading the comments until after the comments close. Then they sort them by commenter, because some folks send multiple copies and there's no point reading the same thing more than once.

Then, I think, somebody goes through them weeding out the obvious cranks and fakes, as well as the dupes. Also, they probably pile up the simple "rubber stamp" ones ("I agree with ARRl/NCI/NCVEC").

What's left are the ones that need a bit of serious reading. Much smaller pile. You think Len's stuff makes it to that pile?

All I'm saying is that they read it. Taking it seriously is another thing...

Today's FCC isn't the FCC of 20-30-40 years ago.

Code test is a completely different issue.

I used to think the code test thing was a slam dunk. Maybe it still is.
But the fact that FCC has taken so long so far makes me wonder. For all we know, they could keep it just because. Or they could do what Canada did. Or something else.

Roger that! The whole thing may have been a bit of a mind-game. ARRL gripes, so they put out a messy R&O that makes ARRL look bad.

I was asking why FCC treats them as two separate bands in Part 97, that's all.

Maybe so!

Note how, in more than one Report and Order, FCC has pointed out how little testing it takes to upgrade to Extra. FCC has repeatedly turned down all proposals that would have granted instant upgrades, like making all Advanceds into Extras. Maybe it's time to take the hint.

I think we're on to the same idea.

I wonder what FCC really thinks of us hams. Sure, they say certain things - because they have to. But consider what amateur radio may look like to at least some of them:

We have huge amounts of spectrum set aside for us by international treaty, and we yelp at the loss of even small amounts of it to other services.We don't generate any real revenue, yet we keep asking for more enforcement.

Users of other services complain about interference from us (even when it's not our fault) and we complain about interference from power lines, appliances, etc., that don't seem to bother anybody else. We raise holy heck over new technologies like BPL, even though the state-of-the-art experts who design the new technologies say we amateurs are wrong.

And now the big one:

We amateurs send in way too many petitions/proposals to FCC, and then cannot agree about what we really want.

I think what FCC expects is for us hams to argue amongst ourselves and work out what rules we really want before sending in any petitions/proposals. Then, when a proposal is sent in and FCC gives it an RM number, the comments are overwhelmingly positive and FCC's job is easy.

Look at the recent "bandwidth" proposals. ARRL sends in one, a group called CTT sends in another. Both are given RM numbers and very short comment periods. Both get a ton of comments - overwhelmingly opposed! CTT is opposed even more than ARRL (something like 7 or 8 to 1 against for both of them).

Could be that the folks at FCC who have to go through all that are angry at having to deal with it? Two groups who both claim to know what's best for amateur radio sent in proposals that cost a lot of FCC resources. But neither group gets widespread amateur support first, so the comments are an overwhelming "NO!" to both proposals.

The Morse Code test issue is even more of a mess. Treaty changes, FCC gets 18 proposals! Huh? Some are poles apart while others are virtually identical. They gotta deal with 18 RMs and comments on all of them. One self-proclaimed "PROFESSIONAL", who isn't even a ham and doesn't intend to be one, sends them hundreds of pages of comments and reply comments, which they have to wade through.

Now look at what Industry Canada dealt with. The national society worked out a compromise on the issue, got consensus from its members and the general Canadian amateur radio community, then made a proposal - complete with detailed poll results. Proposal was supported in comments and sailed right through. RAC made IC's work easy.

When's the last time any proposal sent to FCC by hams (not just ARRL) got widespread support in the comments?=20

Im sure the numbers would look even wose if the licenses expired sooner.
Most of the new hams I know lose interest in a couple of years, long befor the licence expires.

Those darned new hams. They never should have been licensured in the first place. Didn't have the ooomph to get licensed when the tests were harder so they weren't really that innerested in the first place.
Didn't show the proper dedication.

This part is true! The rich people have more access to health care and it is getting to the point that the justice system favors the rich! :( Show you what kind of idiots are running this county! They don't give a flying (bleep) about us poor working class slaves! :(

The "relationship" between ham radio and the FCC is no different overall than the way the FAA gets pounded by the recreational aviation crowd and the Department of the Interior gets Excedrin headaches from the hiking, camping, hunting and fishing bunch. The ongoing regulatory brawls between the skimobile/ATV users vs. the preservationists make our little code test dispute look laughable in comparison. When it's all said and done the regulatory agencies have been instructed by law and funded by Congress to deal with the sometimes goofy issues we the public stick them with - since it's us who are paying them to do it.

No sympathy. See above about who gets paid to do what.

No way. The FCC staffers who deal with these things don't live in a vacuum, they're not stupid and they know bullshit when it lands in their inboxes and they know how to handle it. By now they've long since gotten wise to Anderson's childish antics and his "comments" just get rubber-stamped "READ" and tossed into the outbox without further ado. He's not having any impact at all at the FCC and he knows it, he's trolling for folk like you who get their knickers in a twist over his nonsense.

Back when I worked in Canada for a number of months and it was a real eye-opener. One big lesson I learned is that Yanks in general don't understand that in many respects Canada is culturally quite different from the U.S. even though the language is functionally identical and the border is wide open by international standards. In a nutshell my take has been that Canadians are far more likely to come to a consensus than we are by their general nature. So are most of the Europeans. We're the global odd jobs, we're notorious all over the planet for preferring food fights to regulatory peace and quiet. We is what we is, the old "herding cats" syndrome in play. =20

First off... this is coming from General... who was Grandfathered...

I know many people who are not Extras and who have not passed the 20wpm that respect those OM very much. I love to sit at field day and watch in awe at a CW operator. Just because I can't do it doesn't mean I don't respect it. And there are many other people like that. So please dont lump all of us "meaningless generals" into one please.

Of course not!  Ham radio is a swell fellowship of men.  What you see on RRAP n't ham radio.

HI All,

What is the best programming software for Beacat Scanners these days?

I have a BC 898T and a BC245XLT that I can't seem to figure out the trunktracker programming on.

So, I was told a scanner programming software will do it for me via a serial connection my computer.

Who has had good results with such software and where can I locate it.

Thanks in advance,
Mike - FL

"Grandfathered"? How?

Thanks!

But consider that you could probably do it, too.

Nobody is born knowing Morse Code. Those who know it, learned it and kept on learning it. They all started from zero. Sure, some people have more innate skill/talent than others, but that's just one factor. Most people learn to understand speech at more than 100 wpm - is 20 wpm code more complex than that?

No license class is meaningless.

Sure - but the results may be very different. I doubt FCC is too worried about the amateur community as "the public". They're too busy dealing with wardrobe malfunctions and Howard Stern wannabes.

Agreed.

They gotta accept 'em and read 'em. They don't have to act on them.

I doubt he knows it.

As for knickers, it's not mine that are in a twist.

FCC could have just dropped Element 1 in August 2003. Memorandum Report and Order, coupla paragraphs and done. All they'd have to do is say that the issue was thoroughly discussed before the 2000 restructuring, and the treaty was the only reason they kept Element 1.

But they didn't, and now it's almost 3-1/2 years later.

Yup.

But that makes no difference when it comes to getting what we want out of FCC. I think we'd do a lot better to get a consensus before deluging them with proposals and comments, that's all.

But that's a lot of work. You think an outfit like NCI is going to do all the legwork and compromising to get consensus? Don't hold yer breath.

It friggen figures the president of the ARRL would say that. They're only interested in selling memberships, they're not interested in the quality of the radio amateur. Ham radio can be like CB for all they care.

That's what happens when something gets dumbed down. It cheapens it, and people find no value in maintaining or continuing with it.

And you haven't changed a bit either Len. You should be taking part in the more technical groups and not arguing policy with pro-coders, or are you hoping to be the second No-Code Extra after Markie?

He's upset because he knows CW makes a real ham, and he can't cut it.
That's OK, I encouraged him to try to learn CW while I could before I ended up in the killfile.

sprog is a simple Unix utility for programming Uniden Bearcat scanners.
It is primarily intended as a ``batch processor", but it can also be used interactively.  It supports at least the following scanner models:

American: BC780XLT BC785D BC796D BC250D BC296D
European: UBC780XLT UBC785XLT UBC3300XLT

A comparison between a poor speaker and a skilled radiotelegrapher is worthy HOW? To shine up the "skilled radiotelegrapher?" [of course...]

Compare a good speaker and a poor, unskilled radiotelegrapher's sending and speech becomes way, way faster.

AN/PRC-104...back-pack HF SSB transceiver, operational since 1984. Built by (then) Hughes Aircraft Ground Systems (Hughes purchased by Raytheon).

For civilian-only, try the SGC 2020 SSB HF transceiver used by private boat owners as well as hams.

The PRC-104 has an integral automatic antenna matching package (to the right of the transceiver itself). This insures that the manpack set's whip antenna is always tuned for optimum radiated transmission power.

SGC has several antenna autotuner models available; separate equipments.

You have much experience on "winding country roads?" :-)

[of course you do, you are an amateur extra morseman...]

Are you advocating "no-frills" personal vehicles? Why?

I learned to drive in a 1939 Ford, NO automatic transmission, NO power steering, NO power brakes, No cruise control, NO "climate control" other than the standard heater. Training ground was an abandoned army camp, one which DID have a few "winding (dirt) roads." If you think for one minute that I would give up a nice, comfortable, well-equipped 2005 Chevy Malibu MAXX just to "rough it" for SOMEONE ELSE'S IDEA of what constitutes "good driving," you've got your head up your ass.

Having earned my Army driving license, I will personally challenge you to a Jeep gymkhana (Jeep circa 1940s-1960s) at everything from "smooth straight highways" through "winding country roads" on to OFF-ROAD ANYTHING. I will WIN. Been there, did that, got T-shirts, etc.

That standard issue Jeep had NO amenities except for the post-1950 winch and cable over the front bumper. "Climate control" was whatever the climate was outside. The "power transmission" was a couple gear shifts operated by arm strength and experienced clutch operation. Ptui.

HOW MANY personal vehicles have YOU DESIGNED and BUILT? Include auto kits if you need to.

HOW MANY thousands of miles have YOU driven? Over "winding country roads?" [I don't think so unless you count the old driveway to the Doylestown Barn Cinema...] I've driven the VERY winding country road (rough surface) to a Wyoming working ranch (cattle brand registered in Wyoming is "B-1 Bomber") from/to highway.

One in three Americans has a cell phone. Census Bureau said so in a public statement in 2004.

Back in the late 1940s - a time well before cell phones, personal computers, with (mostly) only sound broadcasting - there was NO great "novelty" or "interest" in morse code communications. Been there, seen that, see no difference now.

So, write the author of the "Harry Potter" series and have her (J. K. Rowling) "introduce" morse code as "magic." :-)

Preservation of the Past is the job of MUSEUMS.

Why do you insist on keeping a "living museum" in amateur radio through federal license testing for morse code in only AMATEUR radio?

YOU had to test for it so everyone else has to...

Fraternal order HAZING having NO tangible value
except to amuse those ALREADY tested for code.

issuses do to a birth defect (i was born with a hole in my heart)and need money to have the surgery to get the hole fix so i am asking for donations to help with the cost since i dont have insurance so if you have a paypal account please look into your heart and donate a dollar or two my paypal emial is mcollins7373@msn.com i need around 20,000 dollars usd to have the surgery done. This is my last resort for money i have tried goverment agencies family and friends and to my dissapointment nothing happened SO PLEASE I NEED HELP thank you so much mike collins

If you were born with a hole in your heart you wouldnt be posting this message, you'd be dead. Now if you are talking about an internal hole Im just curious if you could give us all the medical name for this condition.
I know what the medical name is because Im in the field, just curious if you know what it is. Anybody who has this condition knows exactly what its called. Also wondering if you have checked out the nearest medical college. Most medical universities will do this for little or no charge, since you "will" be a guinea pig so to speak, but its all suppervised by long term cardiac sprcialists, and as a whole do an excellent job. By the way, dont know where you got the 20,000$ figure but a relatively simple CABG or coronary arterial bypass graft will run 3-4x's that amount, and the surgery you are talking about is much more complex than that.
Awaiting your reply.

Listen to the way most people speak, Len. There's a lot of redundancy in the way many people speak, pauses, repeats, "ums" and "ahs', and little phrases tossed in while the person thinks of what to say next.

So? Most people don't speak like they're reading a script.

Let's see...

The AN/PRC-104 weighs at least 14 pounds, according to the literature. Some writeups say as much as 28 pounds. It's a pretty big set - you don't just slip it in a pocket.

How much do the batteries weigh? How long will the set will run on one set of batteries?

Battery voltage is nominally 24 volts, and the thing draws about 350 mA on receive. So you can't just hook it to a 12 volts source, and the power consumption on receive is about 8 watts.

Now the biggie: How much does one cost new? I found some for $2500 - reconditioned.

>   For civilian-only, try the SGC 2020 SSB HF transceiver >   used by private boat owners as well as hams.

Weighs 8 pounds without batteries. Not as big as a PRC-104 but still a lot bigger than a KX-1. Draws over 300 mA on receive, but runs on 12 volts. Costs $800 new, last time I looked. Tuner and such are extra.

The KX-1 weighs under a pound and is much smaller and lighter. Receive current is less than 50 mA. Costs $299 new.

So the rigs that "compete" with the KX-1 cost a lot more money (twice to ten times the price or more), are far larger and heavier (8 to 20 times the weight or more), and the battery life is much less.

Thanks for proving my point, Len.

The KX1 can be equipped with an ATU. Costs a lot less, weighs a lot less, takes up a lot less space.

All weigh more, use more power, cost more money.

Yes. Do you?

Why not?

Sounds like the car I learned to drive in.

It's not about you, Len.

Why would you give up a nice, comfortable, well-equipped 2005 Chevy Malibu MAXX just to "rough it", Len?

Maybe. Maybe not. You don't really know, you're just bragging because you know it won't happen.

That doesn't mean you would win.

What's your point - that you spit at Jeeps?

What does it matter? I could tell you about the time I took two junker cars and made one good one out of them, but you'd find fault with that, somehow.

Gosh, Len, I don't really know. Probably more than you, though.

Enough.

What does that have to do with anything, Len?

I've got a lot more tools than just a hammer. I know how to use them, too.

"Amateur" is derived from the Latin word for "love". Means to do something for the love of the thing alone. Emotional reasons, IOW.

The fact is that there are plenty of young people who like Morse Code and learn it readily. I think that's one reason you want an age limit for an amateur radio license - so those code-skilled young folks can't get a license until they're 14.

So what?

When I was a teenager, practically everyone had a telephone. Why should anyone have a ham rig at home when they can just talk on the telephone?

Sure there was. Ham radio was growing by leaps and bounds then. You were not part of it.

IOW, nobody should do what you don't enjoy.

Preservation of values, skills and culture is everyone's job.

It's not a living museum.

Nope. Morse Code should be a license requirement because amateurs use it. The skill is part of being a qualified radio amateur. Simple as that.

> Fraternal order HAZING having NO tangible value
> except to amuse those ALREADY tested for code.

It's not about hazing, Len. It's about being qualified. You're not qualified.

This is the richest country on Earth. You mean to tell me your ability to get life-saving medical care is contingent upon your personal wealth?

The next thing you know we're going to find out only rich people can get a fair shake from the justice system, or public education.

Thomasville Police are now dispatched by Davidson County 911 Center in Lexington.

Thomasville borders on High Point and Guilford County NC Also, it is near Greensboro and Kernersville, NC.
There are units from Thomasville that roam into these other 800 MHz systems.
I believe there were talk group numbering incompatibilities between the various systems that required talk groups to be renumbered.
Check your talk group numbers before you change RF frequencies.

Also, Thomasville has licenses (sanctions?? coordinations??, I don't know what the proper term is) from APCO/NPSPAC for TWO different 800 MHz systems.

As the FCC database just shows licensed frquencies,
This system data does not show up in the FCC data base.

What can be passed by CW that cannot be passed by voice???

Adhere to the ICAO's phonetic alphabet, and there need be no bi-lingualism nor a CW requirement.

Dear Slow, air traffic controllers don't use Morris Code, and they communicate with foreign speakers JUST FINE!

� 2.815 External radio frequency power amplifiers.

* * * * *

(b) No person shall manufacture, sell or lease, offer for sale or lease (including advertising for sale or lease) or import, ship or distribute for the purpose of selling or leasing or offering for sale or lease, any external radio frequency power amplifier capable of operation on any frequency or frequencies below 144 MHz unless the amplifier has received a grant of certification in accordance with subpart J of this part and other relevant parts of this chapter. These amplifiers shall comply with the following:

(1) The external radio frequency power amplifier shall not be capable of amplification in the frequency band 26-28 MHz.

(2) The amplifier shall not be capable of easy modification to permit its use as an amplifier in the frequency band 26-28 MHz.

(3) No more than 10 external radio frequency power amplifiers may be constructed for evaluation purposes in preparation for the submission of an application for a grant of certification.

(4) If the external radio frequency power amplifier is intended for operation in the Amateur Radio Service under Part 97 of this Part, the requirements of Sections 97.315 and 97.317 of this chapter shall be met.

Go to Mexico and then sneak into the USA as an illegal alien. You'll get free medical care, won't have to pay taxes, can even drive a car without a license, and you'll have fun critisizing unbelievably meek and tolerant White people for being so mean to you.

Why don't you guys take this CW crap to the HAM radio group and leave it there. This is a Scanner Group, not shortwave or ham radio. Can't think of ANY time I've ever tried to receive CW on my scanner.

Here's a reality check.

On 80m the rest of the world, except Canada, has always had phone down to 3600 as far back as I can remember, and we are merely joining them. The VE phone ops still have to stay above 3700, I think.

On 40m the international bandplans have phone down to 7040 except in Region 3 where it is 7030. The only countries that I know of where you can't use phone down to 7040 are Mexico (7050) and the USA (now 7125 after the change).

US hams outside Region 2 have had phone down to 7075 for years, and I am on record as suggesting that we should have that in the mainland US. It's hard to see why not when you actually look at what the rest of the world is doing.

At the same time countries in Region 1 aren't supposed to get access to 7100-7200 until the middle of 2007. Many of them already have, but for those that haven't, a phone subband that goes down to 7125 still doesn't even reach the top edge of their whole band. Doubtless some of them will be late in implementing the extra spectrum, so forced split working will drag on a while longer. How would you like it if your 40m CW allocation were on frequencies that were off limits to the DX?

On 20m and 15m we still have 50 kHz less phone on each band than all other countries. Although General and Advanced got bigger phone subbands on 15 (as well as 80 and 40), the bottom edge of phone didn't move on 15 (or 20).

Nonsense.  The CW bands are not exactly overcrowded (or have you been listening there).

Alun,

With all due respect, your signature line kind of reveals your agenda. We aren't talking about Extra's who don't use CW/rtty/data.   The folks we're talking about here are Generals, the most populous HF license class in the US. On 75m they have just had their CW/rtty/data spectrum reduced by 2/3rds. That's outrageous!

That' may be true in theory, but not in practice. You can't use CW on frequencies which your license class prohibits. Generals just lost 150kHz of prime CW/rtty/data spectrum from 3.6 to 3.75MHz, the other parts of the band their license class doesn't allow. So much for "CW everywhere in band".

No, the rules concerning CW use have not changed. Those rules have never allowed a General to transmit CW (or anything else) in frequencies reserved for Extra and Advanced. In the case we're discussing the 150kHz from 3600 to 3750 have now been reserved for Extra and Advanced, and are now off limits to General who previously could transmit CW/rtty/data in that segment.

That's

Here, I'll have a go.

When the new changes go into effect:

Generals gain 50 kHz of 'phone but lose 150 kHz of cw/rtty (1:3 ratio of gained/lost bandspace)
Advanceds gain 75 kHz of 'phone but lose 100 kHz of cw/rtty (3:4 ratio)
Extras gain 150 kHz of 'phone but lose 150 kHz of cw/rtty (1:1) Novices and codetested Techs gain 75 kHz in one part of the band but lose 75 kHz elsewhere (3:2)

Do you see the disparity, particularly for Generals? Why should it exist? What did Generals do to merit losing so much spectrum?

Why can't the low end of 75 be moved 50 kHz instead of 150 kHz, and the lower limit of each 'phone subband moved down 50 kHz? Then, each license class would gain as many kHz of 'phone as they lose CW/rtty. 1:1 ratio for everyone.

If you don't think 50 kHz is enough, make it 75 kHz. The point is that the most populous license class on the band loses the most total kHz! The ratio is 1 kHz gained for 3 kHz lost - why?

How much will 3600-3700 be used when it is Extra-only?

One more question:

Why isn't rtty/data - particularly wider-than-1 kHz-data - allowed in the 'phone bands? Or rather, why should that restriction remain, particularly on a band that will be 4:1 phone/narrow modes? How are those modes any different from SSTV or CW in terms of compatibility?

It seems to me that a combination voice-data mode would have all sorts of uses in amateur radio. Imagine being in QSO with someone on SSB, and being able to send a data file to them without having to QSY. In fact, with a properly-designed rig, the data could be sent simultaneously on the opposite sideband, or on the suppressed-carrier frequency if a mode like PSK31 were used for data. Yet under current rules none of that is allowed, and the 80/75 bandspace where data modes will be allowed for any class of license will decrease from 250 kHz to 100 kHz - why?

hmm they lost acutals hz did they? is that what you are tlaking around or did things just get shuffed around same number hz justchanging the mode avalable

in the later I say where the beef if they lose acutaul hz for any use (total number for all modes then I have to wonder

Keep in mind that the US has more hams than the entire rest of the world combined if you don't include Japan in that count. So there is the potential for problems if our voice allocations go too low. Our regulations need to take that into account. As far as 40m goes, it will be a better solution if they can move the broadcasters out and make it a worldwide ham allocation up to 7.300. If the rest of the world could go to 7.3, that would open up a tremendous amount of space for other countries.

The comment is that you can use CW anywhere within the allowable frequencies for you class of license.

Since 1955 for international civil aviation. It's taken from the NATO approved phonetic alphabet which came out earlier the same year. I remember it well since I had to learn the "new" phonetic alphabet in a hurry while in the Army then. :-)

Ever since 1955 the worldwide common language for civil aviation communications on airways has been English spoken as well as (now) data. That includes pilots as well as controllers, even in and over their native country; a non-English speaking country MAY use their native language but the civil airways can have many nations' aircraft in it.

Blowcode is just another troll who has his head up his ass in regards to radio communications. That head just hasn't been aware of what happened in radio for a half century.

The ITU didn't "just remove" anything. The ITU-R made the code test for an amateur license with below-30-MHz privileges OPTIONAL to each administration. In 2003. THREE years ago, not "just now." :-)

Alun you've been dumping this old whine into the groups for years now and it's long since worn out. Not that it needs to be explained to you again but the FCC is protecting the dx from the hordes of Yanks who would obliterate the dx if we were allowed to run SSB below 7100.

Dee also explaned it in her immediately preceeding post, read it, give us a break and internalize it this time then go find something new to grouse about for the next five years. Maybe by then your chums in the UK will be able to transceive with you above 7125.

> How would you like it if your 40m CW allocation were on

The difference is all about one SSB signal taking up the same amout of spectrum space as 5-10 CW signals.

There's your real problem.

the FCC does not care about protecting DX forgien or domestic the ARRL may well have when they sugested this sort of arngementmany years (part of incentive licening I supose)

With his head up his own ass, he wouldn't need to eat his own excrement off of another man's genitals. Maybe Robesin can give us hit ake on that.

Failed to upgrade is the trite answer.

The error is attaching the same value to General cw/rtty space per Khz as you're attaching to their phone space per Khz. Which it is not.

Unless I'm 'way off the mark the vast majority of Generals won't miss the cw/rtty space at all and they'll be delighted with their new phone space. Note the lack of Generals expressing any opinions on the subject. If they're not in here complaining about losing cw/rtty space why should us OF Extras care about the subject one way or the other?

> How much will 3600-3700 be used when it is Extra-only?

We'll find out soon enough won't we? Then again the new 3600 band edge could well be just a placeholder for "things to come" rather than just another conventional expansion of phone space. This R&O has too many oddities in it like this one for me to believe that the FCC is finished "streamlining the service". Maybe it's the result of the ARRLs pestering the FCC to publish a response to the NPRMs. So the FCC did and damn the torpedoes so this is what we got. For now. Bought the FCC more time to quietly come up with their "real" omnibus NPRM/R&O?

Doesn't matter where the concept came from originally, it's been in Never heard the term "fist" used in this context but it's been a while since I have spent much time with a coder.

More than words, but how much more? I also have to believe that code is slower than speech. Not usually a big issue but an issue none the less.

With todays electronics, size and weight really aren't much of an issue.

I dunno..I guess I like hearing things like gender or a foreign accent to add spice to communication.

Hmm..well..not really a good analogy. Listening to music is only a one way street while both performing music, as well as radio communications, is naturally a two way street.

Not quite sure how, but I'll take your word for it.

Perhaps the typical ages of people who prefer code could be a factor.
It does tend to be considerably older people who prefer code.

Based on the comments, it would seem that the offending poster was referring to something that was unique to Canada. About the only thing I can think of is our medical care system. And THAT'S not really free at all, as I will explain further below.

>For example, is public education of children a government handout? Yes, >homeowners?

Now as for mortgages and home equity loans, the interest is NOT a tax deduction here in Canada. That could be considered a handout that Americans enjoy, something Canadians can't enjoy. Also, Canada is the second highest taxed nation in the world. Renters get a wee bit of a break in some provinces but not here in Alberta, Canada's "Texas".

Oh PuhlEEEZE!!! Spelling Canada with a "K" is a good sound argument? Calling me a "lazy ass" is a good sound argument? Claiming I get a handout is a good sound argument?

You have NEVER put out ANY kind of argument at all!!! Why don't you try to cite some source that back up any of your "good sound arguments".

Free hint: Hurling insults and innuendo does NOT a "good sound argument" make.

Hope this helps.

Newsflash. Your radio will still work just fine and you will still be able to talk to other hams any way you like. That IS what ham radio is for, after all. Other peoples exam scores will have no effect on your ability to operate your equipment. Are you gonna tell another ham in Berlin than you can't talk to him because Jack Sprat in Iowa got his licence without code? Is your radio experience dependent on some strangers [who you many never talk to] credentials? If so, then your ham license was worthless the day you passed your test.

Dear group

I am having an interesting problem that I hope someone can explain to me.

I live in the UK, about 30 miles from Manchester airport. When my radio alarm wakes me in the morning, tuned to 98.5MHz (BBC Radio 1), I sometimes hear air traffic conversations intermittently. These are loud and very clear, as if the plane is flying directly above.

I also own a radio scanner - an Icom IC-R5. However, I have tried to intentionally tune to the Manchester airport frequencies, but only ever get a weak signal. I find this strange as my alarm clock only has a basic wire antenna - far inferior to that of the Icom.

So my questions are: Why am I hearing air traffic on 98.5MHz? and if my radio alarm can receive such a strong signal, why can't I pick it up with my R5?

Regards

Greg Bolshaw

Both terms are used. Some folks use the term "swing" as well, but that's not exactly a compliment.

Quite a bit, but obviously not as much as a voice. The main point is that skilled operators get more than 'just the words'.

It's a bit similar to the way that one's perception of the written word is affected by the font, punctuation, capitalization, etc. Not exactly the same, but similar.

> I also have to believe that code > is slower than speech. Not usually a big issue but an issue none the > less.

Like many things, "it depends".

The raw speed of the spoken word is obviously faster.

But when you really listen to the way most people speak, the speed is limited by many things. There's a lot of redundancy in the way many people speak, pauses, repeats, "ums" and "ahs', and little phrases tossed in while the person thinks of what to say next. Meanwhile, the skilled Morse Code operator is using abbreviations and other shortcuts that effectively increase the speed way beyond the raw wpm.

For example, the first response in a voice QSO might go like this:

"VE6QRM, victor-echo-six-quebec-romeo-mike, this is N2EY, november-two-echo-yankee, thanks for the call. You're five and nine, five-nine here, good clear signals. I am in Wayne, Pennsylvania, that's Wayne, whiskey-alpha-yankee-november-echo, Pennsylvania, papa-alpha. Name here is Jim, john-ida-mike, Jim. How do you copy me?....."

while using Morse Code, the same exchange could be:

"VE6QRM DE N2EY TNX CL BT UR 599 599 GUD SIG IN WAYNE PA WAYNE PA BT OP JIM JIM BT HW?...."

Same information, two different modes. If the Morse Code ops are reasonably fast, the time is comparable.

I disagree to a point! Look at the size, weight and performance of HF rigs that you can carry with you. Is there any HF ham rig that's SSB-capable that can compete with the Elecraft KX-1?

For fixed-station use, there isn't much size/weight difference, if any.
But when you need to carry the rig and batteries any real distance, the differences become apparent. This is also when you will find that the difference in low power performance really matters.

Of course. And that's part of the point: different communications experiences.

I was thinking of the person who performs the music for themselves vs. listening to a recording.

Either way, it's still a different experience.

Or consider this analogy: It's one thing to drive a car with all the modern conveniences - power steering, automatic transmission, power brakes, cruise control, climate control, etc., and doing it on a smooth straight highway. It's a different experience to drive a car without all those things, on a winding country road where the driver's skill makes a big difference.

I think it depends on the amateur's situation. I know plenty of hams with small children in the house, or with limited space for a shack, where the sound issue is a big one. Being able to operate quietly can be the difference between operating and not operating.

I'm not sure what you mean by "if little or no skill is required, then it's really not worth pursuing".

> It does tend to be considerably older people who prefer code.

I disagree - for two reasons!

First I have found amateurs of all ages who are interested in Morse Code. I have found that young people are interested if Morse Code is presented correctly.

Some say that, in the modern world, young people who grew up with cell phones and the internet aren't going to sit still for something like Morse Code - or amateur radio. And many won't.

However, the very fact that Morse Code is unusual is a big attraction to some of them - because it's so different and unusual. They've seen voice comms - they all have cellphones! Typing on a keyboard and reading a screen is something they've seen since they were babies. But Morse Code is completely different. That's what draws many young people - just look at the acceptance of the Harry Potter books.

The second reason is that the 'bad behavior' of amateurs on the air doesn't seem to decrease with age. In fact, it may be the opposite!

One of the worst offenders here in the USA was a Californian named Jack Gerritsen (ex-KG6IRO). He was found guilty of multiple repeated offenses, all of which involved on-air behavior like jamming, not 'technical' violations. His bad behavior started on the ham bands but spread to public service bands as well, giving amateur radio a black eye. Enforcement efforts up to revoking his license didn't stop him. The guy was totally out of control, a real problem case. So now he is going to prison for seven years and has to pay a fairly serious fine ($21,000US, IIRC).

Gerritsen used only voice modes. He is now 70.

I've lost track of who was using the term "handout". I don't think it was you.

I don't know how Canadian public education is funded, but I suspect that it's not that much different than in the USA - at least to the extent that parents don't pay the full amount, nor does the tax level increase with the number of children in school.

Is public education a government handout to people with several children?

Exactly - if one uses the term "handout". A lot of US homeowners would say that they 'deserve' the tax deduction.

I would say that the USA uses tax policy as a form of social engineering. By making mortgage and home-equity interest count as a tax deduction, the government is supporting home ownership over renting.

Really? Who is #1 - Sweden?

One person's handout is another's entitlement.

One more "handout": some (not all) Social Security benefits. Most Americans make payments into Social Security all their working lives.
Some never collect a penny, because they die young.

But if a person receiving Social Security benefits lives long enough, they will eventually receive more in benefits than they paid into the system - including reasonable interest.

Is that a "handout"?

(sigh)

For many years there was a landmark ham tower near here. Custom rotating steel pole, over 100 feet high, with multiple HF Yagis and a full size 2 element 80/75 meter quad. (That's not a typo). All on a typical suburban lot of less than an acre....

It was built by one ham, and when he passed away another one bought the place. But when the second ham passed, the big tower and antennas needed serious work and nobody stepped up to take on the task.

So the tower is all gone and the house is like all the others in the area...

But some things can be preserved - values, skills, culture. Even if the people and places change.

Image response: 98.5 + 2X(10.7)= 119.9 MHz.

No clue as to why the R5 does not pick it up. Are you listening in AM mode?

In know strictly speaking the 91 ad is not a scanner.
But is is an extremely cool DIGITAL ham radio with loads of scanning features and over 1000 memories.
So I think it qualifies.
I have created a new less uptight Yahoo group devoted to this cool radio so if you are interested come join us at http://groups.yahoo.com/group/IC91AD Enjoy.

I don't have a BC-296D, and don't have a VHF trunked system within range, but I walked through the procedure on my BC796D. Your scanner may be similar.

First off, before bothering with the trunking setup, verify that you have the right freqs and there's a repeater near enough to hear. Program the freqs as if they were conventional channels, and scan them. One of them should carry a continuous data transmission. Lock that one out, and continue scanning the others. If you hear voice traffic, good. Erase the channels you have just entered.

Decide which bank to put the trunked system into. The scanner will work perfectly well if you have conventional channels in the same bank, but it's best to avoid that. Otherwise, you will have to individually lock out the conventional channels when you want to hear the trunked system only.

Press MENU, select SCAN OPTION, TRUNK, BANK 1 (or whatever bank you decided on), ENTER.

Select TRUNK TYPE, ON, TYPE2/P25 VHF. (not TYPE2/P25 UHF !)

The scanner will ask you to SELECT BASE CONF, and the default choice will be BASE CONFIG 1. That's ok, so hit ENTER.

BASE CONFIG sets up some values that the scanner needs to know in order to decode the control channel and jump to the correct voice frequency. It will ask you for base frequency, spacing (my scanner calls it SPACE FREQ), and channel offset. Some of the defaults will probably be correct as-is. When you're done, the scanner will ask for BASE CONFIG 2. If desired, you could enter a second set of base freq, spacing, and channel offset here. But that's not applicable to the system you asked about, so you're done with base config. Press MENU to get back to the previous menu.

Actually, you'll have to press MENU several times to get past the stuff you've already entered. When you see the menu with TRUNK CHANNEL as one of its choices, select that.

The scanner asks for the CHANNEL NO, but the "channel" it wants is the storage location in the scanner, not the frequency itself. The default will be the first channel in the bank. If that's ok, press ENTER. Then you come to the menu for entering the freq. Input the first frequency on your list. The STEPS selection on the menu can be left alone unless you notice the scanner changes the freq after you enter it. In that case, STEPS has to be changed to some smaller value.

Input all the frequencies in this manner. The order isn't important, and it's not necessary to make any distinction between voice channels, primary control channels, and alternate control channels. The scanner will figure out what's what.

That should do it. There are other selections on the trunking menu, but they aren't necessary to get started monitoring the system.

Recheck your settings if there's a problem. It's very easy to make a mistake when setting up a trunked system. My first attempt was with a Radio Shack PRO-95. The display flickered like mad and I got no audio. I thought, oh no, the system's encrypted. It took awhile to discover that just one number was wrong in my base config. Later, after I got a Bearcat scanner, I programmed it with that same trunked system and again botched the job! But this time I was a lot smarter and immediately checked the setup and caught the mistake.

Because odds are the signal you are receiving is an image, try 2 x 10.7 (IF frequency for most FM receivers) +98.5, or 21.4 +98.5 =119.9 Mhz, which is right smack in the middle of the VHF air band.

You don't happen to live near Kelsall do you? The transmitter site at Whitegate gets into quite a few things it shouldn't near there. Not the fault of the TX just poor RF rejection on the kit that hears it.

I don't know if we'll get Mad right away but it's clear the FCC and the ARRL want to drive all good hams out of the service. Little by little they'll take away the non-phone portions of the bands and hand it over to the phone users. Like a frog in a pot of water that's raised to boiling point, one day us real hams will find we have to place to communicate on the ham bands that doesn't sound like Citizens Band.

But the written tests have been dumbed down as well. You don't need to answer as many questions over-all for the General and Extra as you used to.

I emailed President Bush he should kick out all the Bill Clinton Liberals in the FCC after he got elected, but he didn't. I can't blame him though because he choose to tackle the terrorist mess Bill Clintoon left the country instead. I feel a lot safer now than I did under Clinton, and the economy is better too.

I just wish all you people would take a stand against dumbing things down any further. If it continues, it going to make hams irrelevant and our bands will sound like CB.

Wrong.

Maybe you should undo your killfilter for a day or two so you can see what the filth in RRAP looks like.

How's your CW practice coming along? Are you going to be a ham soon?

I'm sorry Opus, but I refuse to lie. You did get a hand-out, and you're Lazy because you refuse to learn CW to 20wpm, and too lazy to to use it.
You don't want to be a good capable communicator in every way. That's just how it is. I'm sorry if the truth seems like an insult. You're right about one thing, I spelled Kanada wrong, I meant to type KKKanaduh. Eh.

My 1957 ARRL License Manual contains 279
Extra questions in 25 pages. My 2000 ARRL
Extra License Manual contains 439 questions and 350 pages just for the Extra exam.

Tell me right now what "handout" I have received. Back up your "good sound arguments" or forever be a PROVEN liar!

You have lied and have been caught. You can't wiggle out of it.

Once again..you are a proven liar and a fool.

You are a disgrace to the amateur radio community.

Oops, forgot to mention something. There are two different modes for scanning trunked systems: ID Scan and ID Search. In ID Scan, only the talkgroups you have programmed into the scanner (via the menu mentioned above) are heard. If you're getting no voice from the trunked system, that could be the reason.

In ID Search, all talkgroups are heard.

Well, sort of. In either mode, the talkgroups you have locked out are ignored. The trunking menu has a selection to display the list of locked out talkgroups, where you can remove any desired talkgroup from the list or clear the whole list in a single button push.

The display will show which mode is in effect. To switch modes, press the SEARCH or SCAN button while the scanner is on the trunked system (either outputting voice or simply checking it for traffic).

All the above is true for the BC796D. I'm guessing your scanner is similar.

That's what has always cracked me up about CB WADIO cops. Why do they attack others on the internet when they should be cleaning up the 11 meter airwaves in their home towns. What a bunch of Loons.

When you sit down at a VE test session the number of questions you have to answer over-all to be a Tech, General, or Extra class is less than it used to be and that's not including the questions lost when CW was dumbed down.

Everyone that desires to be a good ham and valuable asset to the radio service and to their country do.

Now how's your CW practice coming along? Are you practicing or did you decide to pack it in and just talk on a mic like other lazy KKKanadians.
Eh?

KKKanadian licenses are all hand-outs now, just like your health care system, but that's not your fault and I don't blame you for it. Still, if you want to be a real ham you might want to get your code speed up so you can communicate with other real hams. We'd love communicating with ya.

Your blunt refusal to back up anything you claim simply proves to the world what kind of loser you are. Can you deduct your mortgage interest from your income tax? You can? Nice handout because I can't.

Welcome to the killfile, you pathetic little turd, along with the rest of the little trolls hiding under bridges.

You're depriving a village somewhere of an idiot.

"Slow Code" does not know what code speed "Opus" can do. He simply assumes.

Note that we do not know "Slow Code's" code speed, either.

Xenophobic attack rather than reasoned argument.

Opus, you are making a simple but common logical mistake: You are taking "Slow Code" seriously.

Well ... they used to require actual use for renewal, but with the change to "apply and ye shall get" lifetime licensing, you can get a GRL and keep it till you die without ever using it.

For about 90% of the things that used to require the license, you do not even need one anymore.
Some companies may require you to have one on the false security that if you have one , you know what you are doing.  I had the First Class at age 22 and I have never seen a comercial TV or Radio transmitter.  That was over 30 years ago.

no optoelectronics  tech info in private hands !  you'll have to  send it in or wing it , shouldn't be too difficult.

Slow Code, who gives a crap what you think about the code. If you spread as much hatred on the ham bands as you do on the newsgroups then I would never want talk to you on the air. I'll bet you are a repeater jammer or jam people on hf all the time. Anybody that does and says the things you do on here is sure to be a jerk on the air. No doubt about it. And by the way I am top posting again. Post your call for all to see or are you too ashamed to. Your name should be No Balls instead of No Code. 10-4?

Nice to be included in their company.

I would have to prove (for the FCC) that I need special accommodation.
That's not in my plans, but thanks, anyway.

That's the method of Jerry Ziliac, who sends the code at 21 WPM, so that the dits and dahs become a single entity. That only worked for me for some of the characters. The only 4-element Morse I know for sure is <Q> DAH-DAH di-DAH from the mnemonic PAY-DAY to-DAY. All the rest are a jumble.

Sorry -- I failed at this enough times to know it's not hap'nin'.

While not as central to the hobby as it was in the 50's and 60's. There are a lot of builders out there. Elecraft have thousands of radios out there.
I am sure the Norcal series radios number in the many of thousands.
Personnaly I have e K1, K2, (KX1 on order) and a Norcal 40M in addition to an ICOM on KF.

Circuit knowledge hasn't been NECESSARY for decades. Most kit radios of the 50's (I build some Heathkits ,myself as a kid and helped my Dad with a few large projects) had excellent instructions.

They had those well into the 1980's. man I really do miss those.

I have built more than my fair share of kit radios over the last couple of decades (its even more fun trying to build them by braille). its still an excellent learning experience (there is always going to come a time when being able to use a soldering iron will be helpful in repars).

Here's an idea.

Maybe if you relay your messages through Markie and he relays his messages through you, the mistakes will cancel out and your messages will make sense to the rest of us.  Just an idea.

Everything has been dumbed down, not just ham licenses. We can't have skills anymore in america, everyone has to be equal. That's what happens when liberals get to make & change policy. Too many liberals in government.

If an amateur had to relay a through a country and the amateurs didn't know each other language they still could have passed it by CW and the message could have been delivered to someone that could read it. Not no more.

When things start failing communication wise worldwide, amateur radio might be all there is to relay messages, and the ITU just removed one of the legs of a three leg stool.

Anyone that puts out an argument to keep the code requirement gets teased by Cecil. He loves to throw out some goof-ball counter reply to try to be-little the original argument.

There are a lot of CW operators out there too. "A lot of ... out there" doesn't seem to be the current criterion, does it? :)

Which is the point I was making - if we eliminate everything we don't actually need for operation, the only things left are the laws and a demonstration that we know how to flip the switch. Which would probably suit the "let's eliminate the code entirely" crowd just fine.

>> so knowledge of the circuits inside a radio isn't

>Circuit knowledge hasn't been NECESSARY for decades. Most kit radios of the >50's (I build some Heathkits ,myself as a kid and helped my Dad with a few

But getting them to operate properly (except for that fiasco of a 2 meter transceiver they put out - the one that doubled as an aircraft transmitter) took at least some little bit of knowledge. It was really something that you could completely align a (then) modern color TV set with nothing more than the parts in the kit (and you could align it almost as well with them as you could with a shop full of test equipment - I checked a few of them), but for most of the ham gear you had to have some idea of how the circuits operated to get them working really well. Not an engineering degree, but a little more than the "theory" on the novice test.

(Granted, if a legally blind person could build a transmitter - K2TCF built his Apache after he lost his visual acuity - and get it working well, the Benton Harbor gang knew what they were doing.)

I don't think so.

Where do you get that idea?

Equality of opportunity, yes. That's not the same thing as equality of result.

>That's what happens > when liberals get to make & change policy. Too many liberals in Either you don't know your history, or you've got some weird definition of "liberal".

For example:

Were JFK and LBJ "liberals"? It was under their administrations that we got the rules changes known as "incentive licensing".

Were Ronald Reagan and George H. W. Bush "liberals"? It was under their administrations that we got:

- FCC exams replaced by VEC exams

- Openly published question pools

- End of Morse Code sending test

- General/Tech written test split in two parts so that Techs did not have same written as Generals

- Medical waivers for 13 and 20 wpm code tests (Bush "asked" FCC for this directly, as a favor to a King that was a ham)

- Technician lost its code test

Is George "Dubya" Bush a "liberal"? Under his administration, we got:

- FCC support for BPL

- ITU treaty changed to eliminate wording requiring code test.

- NPRM proposing complete elimination of code test

Now - are all those folks reducing the requirements "liberals"?

The pro-code arguments seem to be getting sillier and sillier.

I am a know-coder. I enjoy it. CW is my primary mode. I encourage others to join in. I do not believe for one minute that CW is going to save the world. I am not sure the FCC should be requiring it while not testing for the various digital modes or message handling - seems inconsistent

Jerry, I am a 20 wpm extra and I used to agree with some of the things Slow Code was saying BUT, after all the BS he has created on the newsgroups I am starting to change my opinion. His constant bullcrap on here makes me sick. Its ok to state your opinion and move on but he has a real problem. I mean posting every day in rec.radio.swap for Christ sake. For someone so worried about people doing the right thing he is the worst example.

if you want to stop ham radio being dumbed down you need to turn in your license and BAN the use of CW which has made mindless wrecks of people like yourself I presonal don't advocate that course of action but it is the way stop the dumbing down of radio given the fact nothing in the written is go or nogo I don't meind it being there although a great deal of the stuff their realy needs to go (why does anything need to memeroze that frequency with in FS ATV that is Black (or what ever color) there is NO  need to know this at all even if you are operating the mode

yes I would pare alot of stuff away from the current written and add other stuff and certain  reargange twhat is tested at what in the licenseing structure (I would pull from the tech pool all the question of skip since it is a minor factor at VHF and up ptu these question in the genral pool

It's consistent with dropping requirements all around.  Broadcast stations no longer need licensed personnel on duty (that's been the case for a few decades now), you can repair two-way radios without being licensed and you can operate on the ham bands without having to really pass any test.

funny I seem to recall taking a test and my wife took one a few months ago for her license of course you still can't tell me why it is important to know wether a given circut is a colp[itts or hartley occilator till you can explain what value knowing the name has you can begin to convince me that you went a through a test as realavant as mine

The licensing hierarchy (and the morse code debate) isn't about value, it's about status. It's about having a chip on your shoulder that says "I'm better than you".

Why do you want ham radio to be like CB then by dumbing down exams? Or are you just saying that because you're a typical lazy-ass Kanadian that believes everything should be a government hand-out with no work required?

And half a century ago those VHF/UHF hams had passed a code test. They weren't no-coders, they were motivated and did what it took. Today's no-codes aren't motivated and don't want to make an effort, therefore they're probably not going to be motivated to move things forward either.

I can't help it if you're a lazy-ass Kanadian, but lucky for you being north of the border your govt believes in free-handouts. Too bad it makes for poorer radio amateurs. Ten-Four, Ten-Four, breaker, breaker, breaker?

Do you have any idea how really stupid you sound? You keep on repeating this "dumbing down" mantra like it actually means something.
Newsflash. Ham radio and CB are really only different in the range available. Ham is just CB that goes further and there is nothing you can do to change that.

And, for the 15'th time, the no-code test here in Canada is TOUGHER than the code test.

I have no idea what you mean. What do we get handed to us? I'd like to know because myself and everybody I know has had to work for everything we own.

Please explain what I get handed to me, oh great professor of Canadian studies. Canadian is spelled with a "C" by the way. Don't they educate you down there?

Canadian no-code radio amateurs have to pass with a HIGHER grade than code amateurs.

Can you please explain what my handouts are? Because I seem to have missed them all. I still have to work to pay my rent, pay all my utilities, pay for the fuel in my vehicles...fuel that is MORE expensive here than down south....etc.

And an F.Y.I, Canada is the LARGEST supplier of crude oil to the United States and YOU guys can buy OUR petroleum products CHEAPER than we can here. Nice handout you're getting there, lazy ass.

Actually..I DID get a free education at a public school. I get it now..you are jealous because you didn't get any kind of education, as observed by your misspelling of *C*anada and your other mindless

You have my sympathy but it's not too late to get an education.

You seem pretty knowledgeable so I need some assistance at understanding something.

What I can't understand is the the incredibly childish attitude of some of the pro-coders here. For me, the confusion stems from having known several old timer hams while growing up. I looked up to them. They were older gentlemen that had some fascinating knowledge and great stories to tell about their ham radio hobby. This was back in the 60's and early 70's so they are all gone now.

I am sure now that they are spinning in their graves, after the spew puked up by some of the pro-coders.

Not all of them, to be fair, but a few loud ones stand out.

I still can't figure out how a statement about how CW is just beeps[as opposed to voice on the same hardware] became transmuted into a requirement that I should hate usenet.
That kind of blatant mis-direction seems to be quite common.

The statement is quite simple...a voice on the airwaves can convey much more information than just the words spoken but CW can only convey the words. Since the medium and usually the hardware is exactly the same weather or not a microphone or a key is used, why bother with a key that is much more limited? Somehow, this relates to pixels on my screen but I have yet to understand why my opponent felt the need to misdirect, misrepresent and misquote. Can none of the pro-coders make a valid point?

Why do some of them feel that insulting my daughter will make their point valid? Are their points so weak that they resort to vulgar insults instead of engaging in debate? I usually don't killfile people but I have made a few exceptions lately.

Now, there will be some spew directed towards my post. They can go ahead and prove that turning ham into CB will most certainly be a great improvement to the ARS. I NEVER knew anybody on CB that was as rude and vulgar as some of the pro-coders here. I can have a nasty mouth too, at times, but it's always in response to stupidity that is obviously not to be taken seriously.

And, ironically, I am the one told to grow up. That's just too funny.

Actually, the Technician License was offered with reduced code requirements for hams who were more interested in technical experimentation than in ragchewing.

No smiley here?

That's not correct. The 1981 PC had limited capabilities compared to the XT available not too long afterward. Both had limited capabilities in terms of processor speed, memory and storage compared to the PC's of the early 1990's.

Were there things that the IBM couldn't do at that point, Len?
If not, why were so many folks designing, building and selling systems to allow those early PC's to network with minicomputers?

There's a big difference between designing or building and using minicomputers. I've never designed or built any minicomputer but I have plenty of experience in using and working as systems manager on Wang VS systems. Now what?

Does everyone who is technically minded need a university degree at any time, Len?

That's odd. Our regional jail uses plenty of PC's. I don't know any nannies but I know plenty of housewives who use PCs. I didn't see anything incorrect in Jim's statement. Where are you going with yours?

Relax, Len. It was probably due to his having had prior experiences with you.

I'll bet it took you years to solder the parts on those mother boards. How long did it take you to assemble that hard drive?

Awwwww! I'll bet you meant that you assembled the motherboard into a case, screwed in the power supply, slid in a drive or two, perhaps added a CD or DVD burner, plugged in a couple of PCI boards, attached the monitor, keyboard and mouse and called it a day.

> You are not a member of the IEEE, a Professional Association.

Yessir. I know about the IEEE Code of Ethics, too. What has all this talk of the IEEE to do with amateur radio? Does anyone need an IEEE member to assemble a computer or use it?

> Are you or have you ever

That's great, Len. It looks as if you've found your niche.

> Why are you always telling me what to like, not like,

I say, if it is computers you like, it is with computers you should stick. Have a blast, Leonard. You can take 'em apart and put 'em back together again. You can impress those with less knowledge than yourself.

You left out important information and included a few mistakes. The

I've never claimed to be an expert, Len. I do know some things that you do not know. That seems to really bother you.

I point out some of your mistakes. That's how things go in a newsgroup.

You can have any opinion you want, Len. You can believe the earth is flat, the moon made of green cheese, that "acceptable" has the letter
"i" in it, or that the IBM PC was introduced in 1980. If you express such "opinions", it's possible someone else will point out your mistakes. Your opinion does not make something a fact.

Oh no, I don't know nearly everything. But I do know some things that you do not know. That seems to really bother you.

In the context of the PC, about the past 7 years.

Of course. But until about 7 years ago, most complete systems were well over $1000.

That's relatively recently, Len.

Did it include a monitor? Printer? Supplies for the printer?

That's my point, Len. The prices now are far below what they were even 8 years ago.

Ever hear of something called "inflation", Len? How about "inflation adjusted"?

You know, how the value of money declines in an inflationary economy?

"2006 dollars" is a valid way of describing that.

No, by any reasonable standard. Heck, the original IBM PC was considered obsolete long before 1990.

>   In the

And by the late 1990s they had been eclipsed by much more powerful PCs.

> Try to keep your time frame focussed. And cite your hands-on experience with either designing, building, or using minicomputers for a comparison. Feel free to indulge everyone on your 64-bit mainframe computer expertise.

The point is that those early machines were expensive and limited in their capabilities.

The original 1981 IBM PC did not include a hard drive, color display, network interface, modem or mouse as standard equipment. The software available for it was limited and expensive.

> >As recently as 10 years ago, a complete PC system with reasonable performance cost over $2000 - and its depreciation curve was very steep.

It's not about me, Len. It's about what computers used to cost, and what they could do.

> Why not? Can't you build a functional IBM PC clone for just $100 in parts?

Actually, Len, I'm quite good at assembling PCs. For a lot less than $100. In many cases, for no money at all.

My specialty is collecting older machines and utilizing the best parts from them to assemble a "new" one. Usually I get them before they reach the dumpster, but sometimes I have to reach in and pick something out.

It's amazing what computer hardware individuals and businesses throw away these days. 17" monitors that work perfectly. Pentium II class machines complete with CD burners, NICs, modems, etc. Sometimes the OS is still on the hard drive. Cables, keyboards, printers, and more. It is not at all unusual for me to find working but discarded computers that cost more than $2500 new.

> Do you think you need morse code skills to program computer code?

Who needs to "program computer code", Len? Why do you live in the past?

> I know a few folks who have built whole new PC-compatible computers for LESS than $250 in parts cost. Three years ago.

But you haven't done it. I have.

It's also besides the point: Until rather recently (7 years ago, approximately), PCs were quite expensive. Spending a couple of thousand dollars is a different thing than spending a couple of hundred.

> >"The internet" was originally rather limited and not simple to access

Not the point. What is the point is that there is much more content available. And it's much easier and less expensive to access.

>   Define "technically minded." Did PC users need university >   degrees to access the world wide web? I don't think so.

They did need some understanding of how to set up and use a PC. That sort of thing used to be fairly unusual - not anymore.

Sure they do, Len.

If they pass the tests and earn the license. You haven't passed the tests and you haven't earned the license.

I don't claim to be.

Because you got the facts wrong, Len.

>   Why do you think YOUR "computer history" is Because it is, Len. You got the dates wrong. You left out how much PCs used to cost, and how little they used to be able to do.

If PCs have had an effect on the number of US radio amateurs, most of that effect has happened in the past 8 years or less.

> Have you built ANY personal > computer from scratch?

I've assembled several from components.

> No?

Yes.

That's nice. Were they IBM-compatible PCs? Or were they simple systems from 25-30 years ago?, and you're playing word games with "personal" and "computer"

> Two of them, in > fact. It was fun to do so for me.

That's nice, Len.

> Why are you trying > to tell me what I "should" be having fun with?

I'm not - if you want to build computers, go ahead.

But if you want to discuss the effects of PCs on amateur radio, you're going to see rebuttals to your mistaken assertions.

Morse Code can convey more than the words - if the operators are skilled in it.

It's not the same thing as a voice, though. It's a different communications experience, just as the written word is a different experience from the spoken word.

> Since the medium and usually the hardware is exactly > the same weather or not a microphone or a key is used, why bother with > a key that is much more limited?

Several reasons:

1) It's often not the same hardware. You can use much simpler equipment for Morse Code than for voice modes.

2) It's a different communications experience. (see above). For many of us, that alone makes it worthwhile.

3) It takes up much less spectrum. With good equipment, five to ten Morse Code signals can fit in the same spectrum space required by just one single-sideband voice signal. AM and FM take up even more space on the band.

4) It's more effective under adverse conditions. A Morse Code signal typically has about 10-13 dB of advanatage over single-sideband voice.

That's about 2 S-units. Under conditions that make SSB unusable, or barely usable, Morse Code will often be solid copy with good signals.

There are other reasons, but those four come to mind right now.

> Somehow, this relates to pixels on my

Lots of that going around - on both sides. Don't let it bother you - I sure don't.

> Can none of the pro-coders make > a valid point?

I just made a couple of valid points. That doesn't mean there must be a Morse Code test, just that the mode has some good points.

One of those old timers once told me that he recognized another operators "hand" back when I watched him operate. I am not sure how much more a person can get out of code.

Fair enough.

Well, I did say "usually". But wouldn't simpler equipment limit you to code only?

I am curious as to what would make it worthwhile.

Some very valid points here.

I could see the challenge in this. I remember a certain thrill back when I was a kid, whenever I managed to make out a distant signal and recognize where it was broadcast from.

I just don't like the snotty attitude that makes the ARS look so bad.

I am still waiting for my government handout. Never had any government handouts in the 44 years I have been around.

Thank you for making some points in a nice, civilized manner.

My neighbor, when I was about 12 or younger, had a nifty tower setup. He had 2 tall telephone poles in the ground with enough space between them for a third pole bolted in near the top, adding almost the full length of another pole, save for about 6 feet where all three were bolted together. I was self-supporting.

sell his software. when YOU buy and USE it , you agree to NEVER resell it to others as a condition of using it (you never actually own it). he has killed two of my auctions in the past and I've heard he has pursued legal action at least one time against a seller.

mentioning " probe " in your sale or auction is flirting with serious trouble ..... people usually " show " it in the auction but NEVER actually mention it as part of the sale (tho thats not a sure way to stay safe) ....

just FYI ....

Yes, Some people are lazy and as long as there is a CW requirement they won't go for a ham license, or upgrade beyond tech. They don't really want to be hams enough to put out an effort to be one, but the ones that go for the CW and written exams really want to be hams, and will stick with the service and will be an important part of keeping it going.

Yup. Little things about an op's sending can make it as recognizable as a familiar voice.

btw, the term "fist" is used in the same context as "hand" was used by that op.

The words, of course. How they are sent can tell a lot, too. It takes a bit of experience to recognize all the subtleties of Morse Code.

The main point is that skilled Morse Code operators can convey more than 'just the words'.

I think that is your main point.

Of course.

That depends on the exact situation. The important point is that once you have Morse Code skills, using code-only equipment isn't really a limitation in most cases.

Simplicity of equipment can be very important in some situations. For example, if someone wants to actually build their HF Amateur Radio equipment, it's much simpler and easier to build a Morse Code station than an equivalent-performance voice station. In portable operations, the power requirement, size and weight of a Morse Code station can be less than that of the equivalent voice station.

All sorts of things:

A) You can communicate without talking or typing. (In a world where a lot of us spend a lot of time on the telephone and computer, being able to communicate another way can be a real treat!)

B) The exercise of a skill is fun. Consider the person who learns how to play a musical instrument: do you think making music (performing) is the same experience as listening to recorded music?

C) Once you have the skills, communicating with Morse Code can be as easy - or even easier - than using voice.

D) You can use Morse Code in situations where voice could not be used. For example, suppose you are in a small house, apartment, RV, tent, etc., and you want to operate without disturbing others (who might be sleeping, talking, etc.). Of course you can put on headphones so they don't hear the received signals, but in order to transmit, you have to talk. Even if you keep your voice down, it can bother others. How many times have you heard people complain about folks using cell phones in public? But with Morse Code and a good pair of cans, you can operate and make less noise than someone typing on a keyboard.

None of which mean that there must be a Morse Code test for an amateur radio license. I happen to think such a test is a good idea, but that's just my opinion.

Exactly! The very fact that it takes some skill is part of the fun and attraction.

> >There are other reasons, but those four come to mind right now.

Here's one more:

5) The amount of "bad behavior" problems resulting in FCC enforcement actions is much less from radio amateurs using Morse Code. Just look at the FCC enforcement letters that address violations of deliberate interference, obscenity, exceeding license privileges, and other "bad behavior" problems. Almost all of them are for violations committed using voice modes, not Morse Code. The difference is much greater than would be expected from the relative popularity of the modes.

This doesn't mean all voice ops are problems or all Morse Code ops are saints! All it means is that there's a lot less enforcement problems from hams actually using Morse Code.

Agreed! There's too much of that type of attitude on both sides of the debate.

> I am still waiting for my government handout. Never had any government

How does one define "handout"?

For example, is public education of children a government handout? Yes, many parents with kids in public school pay school taxes, but in most districts those taxes paid by parents do not cover all of the costs of the public schools. And the level of taxation does not depend on how many children the parents have in school. Is public school a government handout to people with lots of kids?

Or how about tax deductions? Are they a form of government handout? If you have a mortgage or home equity loan, the interest is deductible. If you rent, you don't get that deduction. Is that a government handout to homeowners?

Not trying to be argumentative, just trying to get a clear idea of what is a handout and what isn't.

My pleasure. Thanks for reading.

Cool! I recently saw a similar setup used for a repeater antenna in a wooded area. It blended in much better than metal tower.

The question of whether there should be a Morse Code test for an amateur radio license really boils down to this: Does such a test do more good than harm? The answer is always an opinion, not a fact.

Do you want to be a ham enough to get a EE degree which is a lot more useful than Morse code skill?

I know the comment about people leaving Amateur radio isn't Barrys comment, but thought I'd address it anyway. I was 69 when I got my Tech license and 72 by the time I made myself pass the code test and got my General. A lot of the avid pro-morse Hams are even older than I am. I know of no one locally who has just quit the hobby and those senior to me are not leaving on their own at all, when they do stop Hammin' it's 'cause their keys went silent. I never used code after passing the test. I've got the thought in the back of my mind that I may sometime pursue a little CW, but it all depends on when I get my own SK notice.

no the answer is not to be based on wether it does more harm than good the question that must be answered isfirst what regulatory prupose does it serve no regulatory purpose and the test is ilegeal even if it could be shown to do more good than harm

the other question is does the test serve the PUBLIC interest interest no Procder ever deals with the issue of how Code testing benifits

That's because the group is NOT a proper binaries group. Most providers only allow binary files in properly formatted binary groups, which would require the group to start with "alt.binaries.*."

No he doesn't... It's not on Google's list. Nor is any other groups with the word binaries in it. Apparently his news provider follows the guidelines in use for Usenet. If you want to post it, put it in a properly formatted and valid Usenet group.

And how is being proficient in a an archaic and simple means of communication become the standard bearer for what is supposed to be the difference between good and bad operators?

Hey gray-beard!

Show me where a Sony SC1 is "easily modded" for all bands? Do you even own one? Plus, the PRO-26 came out in 1995. If my math is correct, that makes it 11 years old, NOT 20 years old

So, now who is out of their mind????

Fuck the code only shit. Why should that be the only element? Why not make all amateurs retest in ALL modes, at all frequencies, et al. And what the hell, while we're at it, let's just go ahead and make it yearly. Don't let the old geezers off so easily. When a new mode is adopted, or allowed, make those bastards show proficiency there as well. That should just about do the ARS in. Why should you have it your way, SC?

Well said. SC and his ilk are what is wrong with the ARS today. But hell, who knows when I will need morse to facilitate my rescue from a capsized cruise ship in the Gulf of Mexico. I will be the one! No one will know there are really people inside the ship, unless of course, I pound the hammer I had with me on the inside of the hull. And to boot, the Coast Guard no longer teaches morse, so hopefully SC will be there to copy.

I don't hear/perceive/recognize/distinguish/discriminate the dits and dahs correctly. I can learn that dit-dah-dah-dit is G (or whatever it is -- I am not sure and I am certainly far, far beyond caring) and five seconds later not be able to distinguish it from dah-dit-dit-dah.

What's the fix for it?

The ADA says? So what? I suppose that you will next enlist their aid in getting the 5wpm requirement dropped so you can move on to HF. Heck, that way you can be a Zero wpm General.
And if Steve Hawkings ever tried to apply for, and failed, a Ham license, please tell us when.

Don't get rid of your CB, Mark.

Of course it is modifiable. Cut one trace and add one jumper and it's done. Yes I have one. AM and Wide and Narrow FM all the way from 5-kHz to 1300-MHZ. 5-12.5-50 &100 kHz step sizes.
Now why would anyone trade one of these for a limited Pro-26
There is no comparison

You're not supposed to learn dits and dahs, any more than, in French class, you learn the letters of the alphabet. You're supposed to learn the words in CW. Anyone listening to the dits and dahs (dyslexic or not) will never gain any proficiency in CW.

>What's the fix for it?

Learn it by the sound, not by the individual element - the same way you'd learn any other language. See if a ham club near you has classes. If they do, see if the person teaching CW knows the difference between learning the dits and dahs and learning CW by sound. If s/he does, take the course.

I started teaching myself CW (as a kid) by individual letters. After using it on the air for a year (we had very little choice in those days - Gonsets were too expensive for most of us, and there weren't too many other ways to get on 2 meters) I was listening to the content, not the dits and dahs. I still have to "hear" the sound in my head when someone posts dots and dashes in a Usenet post - I never learned to "read" "written CW".

No it doesn't. There's something in there about the test actually testing for the thing it tests for.

Can you just imagine a totally blind from birth person "choosing", as a test for a job that requires color matching, a test to see if he can tell the difference between Braille labels on paintings? Or a "test" for someone who can't drive due to a disability consisting of testing his ability to hail a cab? A test for the ability to receive AND DECODE CW consists of your listening to, or seeing, CW! We don't test a translator's ability to translate French to English by giving him the English translation and seeing if he can "read" it.

That makes as much sense as a man insisting that it's sex discrimination to not hire him to model women's clothing - something that's been thrown out of the courts so many times it has permanent skid marks. Sue the FCC if you like, but make sure the courtroom doors are open or you'll get hurt when they throw your case out so fast the splinters will fly.

>> persnaly Id choose a code >>reader and would of course oviate the test all together. fairer still >>is stop dumbing down everyone in the service with test

Fairer still is to accept that there are a number of ways to get on the air, one of them being to prove a certain very low level of CW proficiency. (5 wpm isn't even reading CW, it's "decoding" individual dots and dashes.) Would you accept a blind person's insistence that he be allowed to travel the same way that you do - by driving his own car? After all, he's disabled, so he can choose whatever test he likes to get his driver's license. How about a test listening to someone talk and seeing if he can hear the speech?

>> that greatest >>physists of the last century could not pass if they wanted to ham I >>refer to Einstain Hawkings and Dirac

What has being a physicist to do with being a ham? But I'll go along with that - in order for you to keep your license you can skip the CW portion of the test, as long as you produce a PhD in physics. Deal? (BTW, Einstein, Dirac and Hawking weren't/aren't physicists. They were/are all mathematicians, although that's questionable in Einstein's case.)

1. Wall charger is dead.

2. Rechargable batteries are shorted.

3. Someone put a curse on you.

One of the three.

Wrong. Here's part of Hawking's bio: "In March 1959 Hawking took the scholarship examinations with the aim of studying natural sciences at Oxford. He was awarded a scholarship, despite feeling that he had performed badly, and at University College he specialised in physics in his natural sciences degree. He only just made a First Class degree in 1962 and in [1] he explains how the attitude of the time worked against him:

"The prevailing attitude at Oxford at that time was very anti-work. You were supposed to be brilliant without effort, or accept your limitations and get a fourth-class degree. To work hard to get a better class of degree was regarded as the mark of a grey man - the worst epithet in the Oxford vocabulary.

"From Oxford, Hawking moved to Cambridge to take up research in general relativity and cosmology, a difficult area for someone with only a little mathematical background."
(From http://www.gap-system.org/~history/Biographies/Hawking.html)

From http://archive.ncsa.uiuc.edu/Cyberia/NumRel/EinsteinLegacy.html:
"Einstein's college record as an unenthusiastic student is fairly well known. So, too, his independence and questioning of authority, all of which may have prevented him from landing an entry-level academic position once he graduated in 1900 with a degree in physics."

From http://nobelprize.org:
"In 1909 (Einstein) became Professor Extraordinary at Zurich, in 1911 Professor of Theoretical Physics at Prague, returning to Zurich in the following year to fill a similar post. In 1914 he was appointed Director of the Kaiser Wilhelm Physical Institute and Professor in the University of Berlin."

So both Hawking and Einstein were trained as physicists, and had the equivalent of a minor in mathematics. Only Dirac (originally an electrical engineer) had a major degree in mathematics.

So what if it is modifiable? There is nothing to hear in the cellular band nowadays. Are you still living in the 1980's? Take away that, and they are about the same. And what about the fact that it's NOT 20 years old like you said? Do your homework next time!

I could care less if nobody wants to trade. I already have a PRO-43 and BC780XLT.

Now if by "words" you mean the collection of dits and dahs that make up an individual letter, I totally agree with you. One should never resort to counting dits and dahs. However, IMHO, the next step to recognizing words (ie groups of letters) comes with time and a lot of experience. I would also agree that until one can copy "words" by sound, that there will be a certain speed limit that you will not get past: For me that wall has been around 20 wpm or so, depending on the quality of the sent code.

FWIW, I have a hell of a time copying code a slow character speeds: < 10wpm character speed. At this speed, I no longer hear the 'sound of the letter', only a bunch of dits and dahs. I find myself playing each collection of dits and dahs back in my head at a higher speed --- bizzare. I first learned slow code with farnsworth (21 wpm character speed) and longer inter character spaces to give the effective slower WPM rates. Increasing speed involved reducing the inter character space time.

One could test using light rather than sound if the disability were auditory in nature. Or by feel --- with a vibrating device delivering the dits and dahs.

Part 97.509(k) The administering VEs must accommodate an examinee whose physical disabilities require a special examination procedure. The administering VEs may require a physician's certification indicating the nature of the disability before determining which, if any, special procedures must be used.

If one looks at the Basis and Purpose for the government licensing Amatures,

I am not sure I see much justifcation for continuing the CW testing. I am a KNOW CODEer. It took me a LONG time to learn code. It was one of the hardest things I have had to learn. It is still hard for me: Although it is my preferred operating mode. I must like pain. I do see the requirement of learning code to be good for THE HOBBY: It introduces new hams to a fun part of the hobby they might not therwise find out about. Though I am not sure it is the role of the FCC to do what is best for THE HOBBY.

since you seem to be a mode to listen let me try Itis my understanding and beliefnthat the Mandate legaly of the FCC is to serve the interest of the PUBLIC in all of it regs (at least that is the thery)

Therfore in my If some one made the case that Code testing was good for the ARS they have NOT finished the job for making it a requirement Klien is found of throwing up red herrings (and it is begining to realy stunk from that the Facts is CW is not required to achive the stated pruposes of the ARS

many Hams NEVER use it and many rarely do the question the ProCoders avoid is how does code testing benifit the PUBLIC at large?

if there answer it does not realy that it can not be shown to then the question of wether it benifits Ham radio is moot and with the end of the treaty requirement I cointend (and others) that constutituionaly the FCC lacks the POWER to require it when you add ADA which allows the disabled to choose thier accomdation (the FCC section you cite is belived by LWAYERS to LEGALY invalid, all it takes about 5K dollars to spare to prove it

if an ADA chalange went we would have people like efectively not taking the test and yet demtrating that we HAVE some abilty to use the mode I have quite a bit of on AIR CW work with computers (I engaged for 2 reason to see how well it worked and to provide a an interactive target for code practice to friend of hgoing for various level of license surely even my worst detractors will grant if I can follow MY typing translated to Morse Coded CW at a given speed you can pass a test at the same speed)

as to machine morse in general I find I can decode with machine and panographic signal display to alow to see the signal I can follow the going of ARRL straigh key night fairly well, why isn't that enough if there were a need for CW?

The stated purposes as put forth in Part 97 would seem to support that. In case you didn't notice, I am not saying the FCC should be requireing the CW test.

True. And many Hams use it. I was on 20 meters this evening and the CW sub band was wall to wall operators --- much more than on the phone subband --- not that means manything special.

I suspect you are being kind. I fear many want the code requirement so as to protect their vision of what Ham radio should be. I am not sure that requiring CW and not requiring proficiency in any of the digital modes makes any sense. Its the inconsistency that seems weird.

If so, that is a shame.

I'm not sure I get your point. I can have someone read me a book (books on audio tape) , or I can read it myself. I prefer reading it myself. However, listening to an audio tape doesn't demonstrate that I can read.

My CW skills are always a challenge. Yet I can usually copy (<20 wpm or so) better than most software programs .. especially in noisy conditions QRM or QRN.

Again, I am not sure I think CW should be a requirement. I think it is good for the HOBBY. I am not sure it is relevant to the service regulated by the FCC.

Could you pass all the tests again today, or would you have to study a little first?   My arguement has always been for the quality of licensees, not the quantity of them.

Requiring an 85% passing score means more study before taking the exams, which translate to a better understanding of the material. My arguement has always been for the quality of licensees, not the quantity of them.

Hams should be skillfull. Proficency at CW gives hams a way to communicate, when no other way might be possible.

Requiring future study in order to continue to be licensed will make for more knowledgable hams. They will be assets. A national resource. My arguement has always been for the quality of licensees, not the quantity of them.

Everyone is welcome in the "good-ole-boy" club if they're not lazy and are willing to learn. If not, there's always CB for them. My arguement has always been for the quality of licensees, not the quantity of them.

Having to work a little to get/gain something gives a little sense of pride in the accomplishment and you appreciate it and take care of it. It's valuable.

Getting handed something for nothing cheapens it. Don't cheapen ham radio. Rigs don't come with kill-filters to notch out bad ops and lids, so let's support policy that minimizes the number of lids on the bands.

It's hilarious watching you CB'ers whine about CW.  Well don't worry, it looks like the FCC is going to give you your dumbed down licenses.

I could pass them all again, no study needed. And that goes for written, Morse Code receiving and Morse Code sending.

Bring out any FCC amateur radio license test from Novice to Extra, from any time since I first got my license in 1967, and I'll pass it. I'll probably even be able to pass tests from long before I was licensed, too.

Every so often I try an online practice exam, just to be sure. No problem.

BUT

I don't see any reason to require routine retesting of hams who haven't broken the rules. FCC trusts us to keep current - that's part of the "conditions of grant".

FCC currently uses retesting as a sort of enforcement tool - if someone acts like they don't know what the rules are, or if there is some doubt as to whether a test session was on the up-and-up, FCC will sometimes require a specific retest.

If you demand that all hams be retested, what you're telling FCC is that we cannot be trusted to keep up with the rules. Is that a good thing?

FCC doesn't require routine retesting of commercial licenses - why should they require it of amateurs?

And once again: Are you willing to volunteer your time to help with the restesting?

But not, as requested, by using an electronic CW reader to test whether the testee could read the resulting Latin alphabet display.

Or theory - the only valid test is a practical one to demonstrate knowledge of operation, which has never been given, and the laws. No one builds any more, so knowledge of the circuits inside a radio isn't really needed. Nice if you want it, but not needed to operate.

>Though I am not sure it is the role of the FCC to do what is best for THE HOBBY.

If you look at the FCC's entire justification for the hobby, you'll see that CW wasn't an issue once AM was invented. But knowledge of digital modes should be tested for now. If the justification for the hobby has anything to do with anything.

Now try when the signal is a few db UNDER the noise floor and you'll see why CW is still a valid mode. (I'm sure that, as a CW operator, you know what I mean.) How many db under the noise does a voice signal have to be before it becomes just part of the noise? (I believe the actual figure is 6db ABOVE the noise to be readable - that gives CW an advantage of about 12db.)

That's about twice the normal wall. You may already be past it without realizing it.

>FWIW, I have a hell of a time copying code a slow character speeds: < 10wpm

You remind me of when I took the CW test in Navy boot camp. My paper consisted of Ts and Es. When the instructor challenged me, I told him that I really couldn't copy anything under about 10, and I was more comfortable around 30. (I was taught CW by W2RD, who could copy 65 with a pen and an ink well, and talk to you while he copied.) The instructor took my challenge and cranked the TG34 (or Navy equivalent - I can't recall any more) up to around 20. When he saw me yawning he cranked it up to 30.

5 minutes of perfect copy later ...

But 1wpm (which is what they gave you after "teaching" you E, I, S, H, T, M and O) was impossible for me. I couldn't hear the lengths of the spaces well enough to tell where the letters ended.

Neither the Code NOR Theory tests will weed out the bad radio operator any more than a driving test will weed out the DUIs - OR - the Physical agility, legal and other exams will weed out bad cops. Those tests are only tests of "Proficiency" in the subject matter - NOT - "Mentality". Those tests won't stop the trash.
But those who choose to not learn code will continue to bitch about why they shouldn't. OK, DROP the code........Next you'll want the "Theory" taken away too. Want to bet?

a rare moment Tom we find ourselves in complete agreement

Indeed Isuspect even SC find his postion desperate after all that is good reason for him to avoid using his real name or call

You don't need to know my callsign, all you need to know is that CW makes for more skilled amateurs and that's why we need to retain the requirement. CW also works a little as a filter to keep the sick, lame and Lazy off HF. We need to bring back the CW requirement for Techs so we can raise the intelligence level of conversations on the repeaters.

Not trying to be funny: "Yeah, he's the one who isn't on the air."

I have the problem and I'll never be a code op.

Samples in typing: "Th enext time; a liitle while". Int he first case (look, there's a real one I didn't plan)

Starting over: In the first case, I swapped the space and the letter "e." In the second one I double-lettered the "i" instaed of the "t." (Another real one with "instead" in the last sentence.)

The problem is real and it's maddening. When somebody tells me I can learn code if I really apply myself, I am tempted to go back at him with something like, "True, and you could grow back the hair on your bald head if you really apply yourself." Yes, it really is like that, except that there's no combover for dyslexia.

I have to dial the phone very carefully and I must read back phone numbers, as I do not translate them well among seeing, hearing, writing and dialing them.

This seems to be a problem associated with the orderly sequencing of things. Otherwise, I'm pretty good at math and very good at anything graphical (maps, diagrams, schematics) or verbal (vocabulary, word games, puzzles, puns). Go figure.

Thanks for asking.

The theory questions even the extra exam is not that difficult. A decent electronics tech with an AA degree can master that test. In fact the tests are so dummied down that just about anyone that has the ability read and comprehend can pass them with the minimal of coaching. So if you think so highly your "Theory" tests then I hate to burst your bubble.

Why should proficiency in one means of communication hender operation in another? I tend to think that those that are very proficient with morse code tend to spend more of their time with that mode of communication. Why should there be a limitation on other modes that do not wish to use that mode? Most hams learn morse code and then forget it. I have no issue with showing proficiency in a means of communication to get priviledges. I have no issues with showing a proficiency with "theory" as a means of priviledges.

The thing here is usage of the airwaves is a priviledge and not a right. So what ever the government cares to do in this avenue is fine with me. I will take advantage of what ever they offer me.

I have apologized to the NG. I also have stated what it will take to stop such behavoir so go talk to Robeson he was accusing Todd of both right I returned to ng he ha accused in my absense Hans of both pedo- and Zoo- phlia. he accused BB of child molesting

I will not allow Robeson or anyone else to sence by harrassment if that means firing back so be it

I am sorry that I have found it needfull to use such tactics I apologize again to the NG in generalmore like 50 perscent the rest would go with your buddy K4yz
but yes their is still magaic I play with it (although yes acess to HF would be a help as I learn the ins and out of EME and other VHF+ modes pity that progress in the ARS is opposed at every turn by hams

My comment was based on this statement on the Grove site:

Getting The Most From The New Uniden Scanners
by Paul Opitz

"The major impact of rebanding will be on all Motorola analog using the BC-235/245/895/780/250D/785D scanners and P25 systems using the 250D/785D scanners. The fore mentioned scanners cannot be used when rebanding plan is implemented and cannot be flash upgraded. The customer will have to buy a new scanner to monitor any system that changes frequencies due to rebanding. " and in stating that you just used the Consitution of the USA as toilet paper

it is just that simple the govt officail to regulate radio would derive from the "Nessary and proper clause" the ITU treaty under the supremacy clause and the rest to US (or the staes how are then exclude from radio regulation by the ITU treay) in partical the Govt has one other source of power over radio a(and anything else they should not have) the willing of citizens to lie and take it

The Govt had the power (and legal duty) to do code testing till 2003 when the treaty changed the FCC has conceeded its intent we are waiting on them to push the paper

James,

Rethink what I wrote. I'm not claiming the tests are "all that"........ You are right, they ARE dummied down and NO, you do NOT need an AA degree to pass the Extra. Just some diligent studying. I was merely saying NEITHER test will eliminate the crap - for starters. BUT those who "are" whining about the code - if they get their wish, will then want the written exam dropped too. In other words - FREE - uninhibited passage. IF we gave Drs', Lawyers, Drivers, Pilots and other licenses away like some want the Ham licenses handed out, where would we be? Ham radio may not be all that, but it is what it is. Anything more stripped away from it - and it won't be worth having.

"I" had to learn the code, it really is no big deal. Do I use it? Not much, but I'm still glad I learned it. It was a matter of self discipline. Hey, drop the code......Who am "I" to force it down anyone's throat? That isn't my aim or argument. Again - you're going to see the push for the rest to be dropped too - some just aren't satisfied. Mark my words.

Fred G.

to you that is the case I spend 5 years on and never got a novice license that I call a big deal duely marked but exactly who do you think is going to push for this?

personaly I will push to cponsolate down the number of classes which will reduce the number of tests of course and since there will not be as amny defferent set of band edges the number of question wiull certainly drop further but the only people claiming the written test will are those insistign the code test should should not die

I read your post and understood it. My beleifs is that those that will complain about a "theory" test are those that want the license handed to them. They don't want any kind of test. Unless the government does that, I still hold that some form of written test is applicable.

I learned enough code and then I never touched a key again. Made two contacts total via morse code. Never cared for it and never intend to use it. At the time my interests were more in VHF/UHF anyways. HF was to much like CB. He who had the biggest amp and antenna was heard. VHF/UHF systems require more than a big amp and a big antenna.

I whined about the code requirements and still do. But I also understand, that what ever the government determines as the standard for obtain levels oflicensing are the rules that I ahve to play with. As I stated I have no issues with levels of "theory". That part to me is easier to learn.

Who is "we"?

FCC makes the rules. They're the ones who have to be convinced. For more than 25 years, FCC has been convinced that the Amateur Radio license exam requirements should be reduced. The changes have come a little at a time, but the direction has been the same since the late 1970s.

in thereoy Jim we do make the rules, at least in the usa (outside the usa well YMMV)

in paractice the FCC does based on what convinces it and depite theARRL and other gruops supporting code a smale numbe rof the people exercising our lawfull rights and duties as citizens have maneaged to convince them otherwise you neeed to look at that NoCode is poised to to finsihs off code testing in the USA .

why becuase we could mount a better arguement than you your side could You're just lazy. Lucky for you they dumbed things down so you could slide into the Tech class.

I know, but we can send them emails and tell them we won't go for anymore dumbing down or simplification. They'll do what they want, but at least we tried.

Dumbing it down to my level would still keep it out of your reach.

You raise some good points Jim. That's why I've always proposed the following licensing changes:

1: No more automatic renewals. Individuals must retest and pass all elements required for their license class.

2: The passing score for written exams needs to be raised to 85%.

3: Code elements should be 13 wpm for General, and 20 wpm for Extra.

4: Make the no-code license one year non-renewable.

That doesn't say that certain other scanners WILL be flash-upgradable
- it only addresses whether those 8 will be, and they won't, regardless of the final outcome of rebanding.

Whether any current scanner will be upgradable - by flashing or otherwise - after rebanding remains to be seen. If, for example, channel numbers can be arbitrarily assigned to frequencies (there's equipment that can do that now), you won't be able to program a scanner unless you have that assignment list - which would probably be closely guarded.

We're all - users, designers and manufacturers - in the same boat.
We'll just have to wait and see. And you can bet that it's going to take longer to arrive at the final solution than it's supposed to.
When has a government job ever come in early or for less than originally planned?

That's not dyslexia - it's your fingers and your brain not working together. "The exnt itme" looking right to you would be dyslexia.

Except that I type like that too sometimes (and I'm not dyslexic), which is why, even with a spell checker I reread my posts before posting them. And I can still copy CW at somewhere between 15 and 20, although I haven't sat down to copy any long transmissions in over 20 years - but I used to rag chew at 40+.

There's a difference between a keyboard and a key or bug. (Never could get the hang of paddles.)

Since CW is more a verbal skill than a written skill, dyslexia shouldn't affect it much (although I don't know of any studies done on the subject - it's just a seat-of-the-pants guess).

That's not how it works. What does "we won't go for anymore dumbing down or simplification" mean, specifically? Those terms mean nothing to FCC - they want specifics.

For example, you might consider the reduction of the General and Extra to 5 wpm to be "dumbing down". But way back in 1990, FCC made those licenses available with just 5 wpm code and a medical waiver. FCC has said, publicly, that they see no difference between medically-waivered
"5 wpm" hams and those who passed 13 and 20 wpm when it comes to enforcement issues. How do you respond to that argument?

Way back in the early 1980s, a president with initials RR was elected in part on the promise to "get government off your back". That translated to less regulation and simpler regulation, as well as less money for "legacy" government agencies like FCC. So they have gone for simpler and easier ever since.

> They'll do what they want, but at least > we tried.

Did you comment on the recent Notices of Proposed Rulemaking? Or the various proposals that FCC accepted comments on?

That's how FCC accepts input.

And when the various proposals have been presented, the majority of those commenting support Morse Code testing, and relevant written testing.

But they aren't an overwhelming majority. 55% is about the max.

And FCC doesn't have to do what the majority wants. They decide what to do based on a whole bunch of factors. Comments are only one factor.

No test will weed out 100% of the "bad apples". That does not mean tests have no effect.

Would you rather that we not have driving tests, since the they obviously don't weed out all the bad drivers?

No need to bet.

There have already been proposals to reduce the written exams below what they are now. Fortunately, they have been rejected by FCC - so far.

The youngest Extra I know of earned that license at the age of seven. You don't need any sort of degree to pass the exams - nor should you.

Well, some do. I don't know about "most".

How many hams learn the theory and then forget it?

> > I have no issue with showing proficiency in a means of

The argument seems to be this:

"Why should someone have to learn Morse Code in order to use other modes? Let those who want to use it, learn it, and the rest not"

If you accept that argument, how do you oppose the following:

"Why should someone have to learn theory in order to use a manufactured rig?"

"Why should someone who only wants to operate HF have to learn about VHF and UHF?"

"Why should someone who only wants to operate QRP have to learn about RF exposure?"

"Why should someone who only wants to use vacuum tube equipment have to learn about solid-state?"

Etc.

In other words, why should anyone have to learn anything they don't intend to use?

Why?

And who will do all the testing? There are over 650,000 US hams now. We get a couple of thousand new hams per month - that works out to about 2,000 exams per month.

If 10% of those 650,000 have to retest each year, that's 65,000 per year. Which is more than 5,400 additional exams per month.

Are you volunteering to do all those exams?

> 2: The passing score for written exams needs to be raised to 85%.

Sell it to FCC.

> 3: Code elements should be 13 wpm for General, and 20 wpm for Extra.

Sell it to FCC.

> 4: Make the no-code license one year non-renewable.

Why? Does a person forget that much in a year?

And who will do all the additional testing?

Sounds like the "Whiskey Rebellion" talking.

Nope. No comments from "Slow Code."

Slow is a little slow on the uptake. Others mitght know him as W3RV.

So?

They asked for a concensus. The ARRL refused to give them one.

Obviously the ARS isn't a popularity contest. Hopefully its not a "Good Old Boys" club either.

Why retest knowledge? Not necessary unless your intention is to reduce the ranks of the amatuer radio service. Few if any government priviledges require constant retesting for renewal. Your thinking is not logical.Besides it increases the government and costs. The government would then be forced to charge for licensing.

>+++2: The passing score for written exams needs to be raised to 85%.

Again 70% is sufficient. Raising to the limit you suggest is more a weed out than anything else.

>+++3: Code elements should be 13 wpm for General, and 20 wpm for Extra.

The ITU no longer requires CW for any of its commercial services. Why do you stillinsist on such high levels. Again your motive appears to be more selective as to who may be granted a license.

>+++4: Make the no-code license one year non-renewable.

Why? when this class already has very strong restrictive priviledges.
This would not be the incentive to upgrade to a higher license. Some maybe satisfied with the priviledges of this class and making it a one year nonrenewable will not be the incentice to an upgrade path.
Instead it will be another step in restricting any growth in the amature radiio service. Then again if you prefer dwindling numbers, go ahead. Radio and its associated costs can not compete with the internet. If I want to talk to some one in Australia it is now far easier to use IRC or other messaging programs in conjuction with the internet. If you intend to further restrict the amature service to nothing more than a "good ole boys club", then you yourself have become the problem.

The interesting thing is that almost all amateur radio magazines have been attempting to feed us the line that amateur radio is not being dumbed down, yet it is quite obvious that it is.

While you guys are waiting for the Great Liberty Net
(the greatest net on ham radio - Sat evenings 10:00 PM on 3.950 LSB +/1 20kc QRM) check out the website http://www.ve7kfm.com/ for some VERY AMUSING audio clips of the guy from "Can-Ahhh-Duh" who loves Americans and other peoples. Where else caoud you get great DOWNLOADABLE SOUND FILES like the great Sid-the-Lid talking about "nig-er ballgames" and other stuff like this..?

Example: http://www.ve7kfm.com/niggers.mp3
"Madera's good friend Sid (BLB) discusses niggers: "Out of five channels on, we had six nigger ballgames." "

Where else but on HAM RADIO can you get such STELLAR ENTERTAINMENT as this ?? !!

Fuck, can't you even write a complete sentence, Penquin boy? Now put on your homemade Trekkie uniform and Spock ears and  masturbate  to the scantily clad women on the series since you can't get a real date.

what other problems I may, or may not, have is not up for public discussion by or for you.

and while we are on the subject, what about your ongoing (and very public) problems?

eh dumbass (it takes one to know one)?

Basically true, but that's not the whole story by any means.

Until rather recently, personal computers were rather expensive. The IBM PC (introduced in August 1981) cost over $1500 in its basic configuration - which works out to about $3500 in 2006 dollars for a machine with very limited capabilities.

As recently as 10 years ago, a complete PC system with reasonable performance cost over $2000 - and its depreciation curve was very steep.

"The internet" was originally rather limited and not simple to access for the non-technically minded. That's all changed now.

On top of all this is the evolution of the PC from an expensive techno-toy to an everyday tool in most workplaces, schools, and homes. "Computer literacy" is now expected in most jobs.

The synergy of low cost, easy-to-use computers, easy and fast online access, and a reasonably computer-literate public has only come together within the past 10 years.

In that time, the number of US amateurs has actually dropped by over 17,000.

It should be noted that the number 737,938 includes not only those licenses which were current at the time, but also those which were expired but in the 2 year grace period. The number of then-current licenses was about 50,000 lower.

But you have never been "IN" amateur radio, Len.

Yet some pioneers (like Reginald Fessenden) were using voice communication as early as 1900, and had practical lomg-distance radiotelephony by 1906. AM broadcasting was a reality by 1920.

While some radio operators came from the ranks of landline telegraph operators, most did not, as it was predominantly young men who pioneered radio in the early part of the 20th century. The Morse Code used on landlines was "American" Morse, while that used on radio after 1906 was predominantly "International" or "Continental" Morse.

Why is that "outmoded"? What has replaced it?

So what? Amateurs choose the mode they want to use. What is wrong with choosing Morse Code and HF operation?

Some may say the Morse Code test is outmoded. But you are saying the use of Morse Code is outmoded!

FM broadcasting is the only radio service that uses stereo multiplex FM - is it outmoded?

What "formalism" do you mean, Len?

The use of call signs? Signal reports? Using only first names?

Amateur radio is among the least formal radio services I know.

How would you have amateurs operate?

> Amateur radio, by definition, is NOT professional.

So what's the problem with a standard procedures?

> Too many olde-tymers want to PRETEND they are pros in front of their ham rigs.

Not true, Len. We're amateurs - but that doesn't mean we have no standards and no procedures. The use of standard procedures makes it more fun and easier on everyone involved.

> But, there is still an enormous area of the EM spectrum that is still open for experimentation, for just the fun of doing something out of the ordinary above 30 MHz. That can be a very different RF environment, much much different than the technology available in the 20s and 30s.

And a license to use a good chunk of that spectrum has been available without a Morse Code test for more than 15 years. But you have not taken advanatage of it.

> It has exciting possibilities...except for the rutted and mired olde-tymers unable to keep up with new things, secure in their own dreams of youth and simple technological environment.

Do you have a problem with youth, Len? Or simplicity?

Who pioneered the use of the HF spectrum, Len?

Who first established two-way HF radio contact?

> DONE a long time ago. The solid-state era came into being about 45 years ago and has revolutionized ALL electronics (radio is a subset of that).

The transistor was invented in 1948 - 58 years ago. Amateurs were using them in receivers and transmitters by the late 1950s.

Yet the predictions are not always correct. Openings happen when no opening is predicted, and predicted openings do not always happen.

And high-end audio...

So what? Those things are only one part of amateur radio. There's a lot more.

Of course not. That doesn't mean old things are all bad.

The phrase was "no kids, no lids, no space cadets, Class A operators only". It was used by a now-dead radio amateur who had the callsign W2OY. He did not use CW - he was an AM-only operator of the 1950s and 1960s.

The phrase is remembered because it was so unusual.

"CW" (aka Morse Code) is popular with many radio amateurs, not just "old timers".

Is there something wrong with the use of Morse Code, Len?

Actually that number is probably low, considering how many more go into use every day.

Millions?

And there lies the difference: Almost all other radio services require the use of only certified, channelized, no-user-adjustments-possible equipment. Most of those "millions" or transceivers cited are very low power and use only a single mode and a few channels. The user has almost no real control over the operation of the radio. This is most true in the case of the cell phone/

Maybe for you, Len. Not for hundreds of thousands of radio amateurs.

In other words, Len, you want to tell us what we should like and what we should not like. What we should enjoy and what we should not enjoy.

What is wrong with live and let live?

If we raise the CW speed to 20 WPM for all classes including the Tech class, hams will tend to study the theory more while they build up their code skill and they will understand the theory better and won't need to ask silly questions. So increasing the speed requirement will get us better & smarter hams.

Lazy people that don't want to learn anything will stay on CB and die in shoot-outs with each other in shopping mall parking lots which will help clean up the CB band. To me it looks like a Win Win situation. What do you think?

no, that's not it. I hear that Pro-Turbo is for windows. This was the original programming that came with the kit and ran on DOS.

Thanks, though,

Well,
I actually did buy it. It came with the package for the kit.
So, I reckon I do have a license, just can't find a reciept.  But that doesn't seem to matter as all references to Mr. Cheeks on the web lead to errors

So, does anyone have a copy they could send?

Great! Let's increase the CW requirement to something that you cannot copy and improve amateur radio by an infinite amount.

You need to boot into DOS, and run RSS from there. You can probably run from a DOS window when creating the configuration, but you have to run from native DOS when reading/writing the radio.

I think the HT1000 (and other Jedi family radios) are fast enough that processer speed is not a issue, but the older radios needded to be programmed using a 486-33.. Faster machines would't work, as the radio couldn't accept the data that fast. (the speed that the PC talks to the radio is/was based on the processer speed of the PC, and not a standard port speed. IIRC.. braindead, but that's /\/\ for you.)

Hey Folks,
I pulled my old pro-46 out, but have forgotten the codes to unlock it.
It was press and hold 9, then turn it on or something. I forget..
HELP!

I'm also looking for freqs for the Bangor, PA area. I once had it bookmarked, but after three computers yearly, its gone..

Thanks for any help!

I wrote a chronological synopsis. If you need more material, you can crib from Robert X. Cringely and/or dozens of others.

If you need a "whole story" then WRITE one and get it published. You are the self-styled knowitall "expert" who tells everyone else what to write correctly and not correctly, what to like and not like. You know everything, yes? Of course you do...you are a code-tested amateur extra.

>Until rather recently, personal computers were rather expensive.

Define "recently." The prices for complete personal computer systems, components have been constantly dropping since the beginning of 1982.

Five years ago a complete PC sold for $500 plus tax at Lowes near Gig Harbor, Washington. Hewlett-Packard brand no less! :-)

Complete PCs - and laptop portables - can be purchased today at Fry's on the west coast for $500; go to www.outpost.com to see their mail-order products.

>The >IBM PC (introduced in August 1981) cost over $1500 in its basic >configuration - which works out to about $3500 in 2006 dollars for a >machine with very limited capabilities.

The IBM representative showing off their PC at Rocketdyne in early 1982 was NOT taking orders in "2006 dollars." The Treasury Departement would have arrested both reps and IBM Corporation had they done so.

"Limited capabilities?" Only by today's standard. In the early 1980s the first IBM PCs were the EQUAL in power of any 16-bit minicomputer then on the market. Try to keep your time frame focussed. And cite your hands-on experience with either designing, building, or using minicomputers for a comparison. Feel free to indulge everyone on your 64-bit mainframe computer expertise.

>As recently as 10 years ago, a complete PC system with reasonable performance cost over $2000 - and its depreciation curve was very steep.

You did not do any "dumpster diving" for parts to build your own PC? Why not? Can't you build a functional IBM PC clone for just $100 in parts? Do you think you need morse code skills to program computer code?

I know a few folks who have built whole new PC-compatible computers for LESS than $250 in parts cost. Three years ago.

>"The internet" was originally rather limited and not simple to access for the non-technically minded. That's all changed now.

Neither the Internet ("world wide web") nor commands for browsers accessing the Internet have changed in 15 years.

Define "technically minded." Did PC users need university degrees to access the world wide web? I don't think so.

>On top of all this is the evolution of the PC from an expensive techno-toy to an everyday tool in most workplaces, schools, and homes. "Computer literacy" is now expected in most jobs.

Jailhouse guards, housewives, nannies don't need "computer literacy." They can all be amateur radio licensees, though.

Yawn. Robert X. Cringely you are NOT. :-)

Why are you trying to tell me what to believe and not believe? Why do you think YOUR "computer history" is "more accurate" than mine? Have you built ANY personal computer from scratch? No? I have. Two of them, in fact. It was fun to do so for me. Why are you trying to tell me what I "should" be having fun with?

You are not a member of the IEEE, a Professional Association. I am a Life Member of the IEEE. Are you or have you ever been a voting member of the ACM (Association for Computing Machinery)? I have. [got the stupid T-shirt "Dragon in a Member" slogan on the front...but it was free...<shrug>]

Why are you always telling me what to like, not like, enjoy, not enjoy, what to post, what not to post?

What is wrong with live and let live?

>choosing Morse Code and HF operation?

Now, now, Jimmie, you are assigning some "blame" on a plain and simple factual statement: "Amateur radio is the ONLY [US] radio service still using morse radiotelegraphy for communications purposes."

What I wrote is a plain and simple fact.

You seem to be in denial, unable to accept a plain and simple fact. Your problem, not mine.

>Some may say the Morse Code test is outmoded. But you are saying the >use of Morse Code is outmoded!

Yes, in every other radio service except amateur.

You seem to be in denial, unable to accept a plain and simple fact. Your problem, not mine.

>FM broadcasting is the only radio service that uses stereo multiplex FM >- is it outmoded?

There is NO SUCH THING as "stereo multiplex FM" mode.

FM broadcasting is NOT the "only radio service" using stereophonic audio modulation. Stereophonic audio modulation is NOT required by FM band broadcasters. Those broadcasters MAY use stereophonic audio OR they may use monophonic audio plus a SUBCARRIER separate audio channel OR they may use stereophonic audio PLUS the subcarrier audio. The term "multiplex" applies to SEPARATE information sources, not stereophonic audio. All of that is very much in use today.

DTV (Digital TeleVision) broadcasting carries QUADRAPHONIC audio (optional, may be monophonic or stereophonic) with or without extra separate audio subchannels, with or without audio text ("Teletext") accompanying the video. That is very much in use today and for the foreseeable future of American TV broadcasting.

Some AM broadcasters are still using the Motorola C-QUAM system for stereophonic broadcasting where each stereo "channel" takes one of the two DSB sidebands. While that system works well, the AM broadcasting listener market has NOT received it well enough to warrant more than a few broadcasters adopting it or any similar AM stereophonic system. It appears to be on the way out due to listener non-acceptance.

"Shortwave" broadcasting is still "testing" Radio Mondial system which is capable of stereophonic audio transmission. Technically the system works very well. The increased cost of receivers and the general downturn in world interest in "shortwave" broadcasting might result in a future discontinuance. Note: What was once "shortwave" radio broadcasting is increasingly shifting over to satellite relay and VoIP dissemination rather than maintaining the HF transmitters; program content remains the same.

The International Civil Airways VOR (Very high frequency Omnidirectional radio Range) system ground stations ALWAYS broadcast with a subcarrier (9.96 KHz) that is FMed with the reference magnetic azimuth bearing phase. The RF output is amplitude modulated with 30% AM so that any receiver can determine its magnetic bearing to the ground station by comparing the demodulated reference phase with the main AM phase. Relatively simple receiver demod that was devised in vacuum tube architecture times. In use since 1955 worldwide, no foreseeable discontinuance in the future despite wider use of GPS.

Multi-channel (many "multis") using FM was once the choice of trans-continental microwave radio relay, the linkage across the USA that made national TV and 'dial-anywhere' long distance telephony possible. It has been largely replaced by optical fiber relay using digital multiplexing of voice and TV channels using digital modulation of laser light. The longest (to date) fiber-optic relay is the long, long like between London and Tokyo through the Mediterranean Sea past Saudi Arabia, India, around southeast Asia, past the Phillippines. Most of it under water. Optical "pumping" with a second optical wavelength is used for amplification to avoid electronic repeater amplifiers. Such optical pumping (amplification) is not possible with microwave RF radio relay.

There are many different other examples of "FM"-like modulations at work daily in HF and on up into the microwaves. The most common is the various adaptations of the common dial-up modem using combinatorial amplitude and phase modulation of an audio carrier wave. Those are the "TORs" (Teleprinter Over Radio) used for data communications in maritime service; voice is done via SSB and may be simultaneous with the data. This is on-going in use and for the foreseeable future.

The FIRST HF Single Sideband circuits (since the beginning of the 1930s) used combinatorial modulations. The 12 KHz bandwidth was composed of four 3 KHz wide separate one-way channels. Each 3 KHz (voice bandwidth) channel could carry up to 6 frequency-shift-modulated teleprinter channels. The common arrangement worldwide (by both commercial and government users) was to use two 3 KHz channels solely for voice/telephony and the remaining two for 8 to 12 TTY circuits (number dependent on the redundancy required to overcome selective fading). While those "commercial" SSB circuits were numerous from the 40s on into the 70s, their number has dwindled due to better throughput and reliability from satellite radio relay services.

Was there anything else technical about communications and/or broadcasting that you wanted to erroneously state?

The increased cost of receivers and the general downturn in world interest in "shortwave" broadcasting might result in a future discontinuance. Note: What was once "shortwave" radio broadcasting is increasingly shifting over to satellite relay and VoIP dissemination rather than maintaining the HF transmitters; program content remains the same.
> The International Civil Airways VOR (Very high frequency Omnidirectional radio Range) system ground stations ALWAYS broadcast with a subcarrier (9.96 KHz) that is FMed with the reference magnetic azimuth bearing phase. The RF output is amplitude modulated with 30% AM so that any receiver can determine its magnetic bearing to the ground station by comparing the demodulated reference phase with the main AM phase. Relatively simple receiver demod that was devised in vacuum tube architecture times. In use since 1955 worldwide, no foreseeable discontinuance in the future despite wider use of GPS.

> Multi-channel (many "multis") using FM was once the choice of trans-continental microwave radio relay, the linkage across the USA that made national TV and 'dial-anywhere' long distance telephony possible. It has been largely replaced by optical fiber relay using digital multiplexing of voice and TV channels using digital modulation of laser light. The longest (to date) fiber-optic relay is the long, long like between London and Tokyo through the Mediterranean Sea past Saudi Arabia, India, around southeast Asia, past the Phillippines. Most of it under water. Optical "pumping" with a second optical wavelength is used for amplification to avoid electronic repeater amplifiers. Such optical pumping (amplification) is not possible with microwave RF radio relay.

The most common is the various adaptations of the common dial-up modem using combinatorial amplitude and phase modulation of an audio carrier wave. Those are the "TORs" (Teleprinter Over Radio) used for data communications in maritime service; voice is done via SSB and may be simultaneous with the data. This is on-going in use and for the foreseeable future.

Whewww. That was a gassy one.

Try to stick to one argument at a time. You were arguing for voice - now you're arguing against it. Or is just any argument that might possibly be construed to make CW look bad?

Deaf-blind dogs and cats don't normally walk around the streets without aid. (Domesticated cats, btw, aren't scent-oriented, they're vision-oriented.)

Inconsistent.

Neither is voice.

It's not a barrier to USING radio - it's a barrier to one particular hobby, which incorporates CW as part of itself. You want to ride a bike as a hobby but not use wheels?

Code - ham.
No code - CB.

If that's too complicated for you to grasp, maybe you should take up grass-watching as a hobby.

So if she screamed at you, in Ukrainian, with her face all screwed up,
"You were so good!", you'd get the proper information, that she was about to take you to the wood shed for the terrible thing you'd done.
Right?

I can convey as much emotion in CW as your grandmother could in Ukrainian. You don't understand CW, so you can't understand how that could be true - which is why you're not qualified to discuss the matter.

My job is like describing the difference between red-orange and orange-red to someone who's been blind from birth. "Red-orange is redder than orange-red." "But ..." No buts - it is. Someone who's never seen just can't understand.

Raw data is all that's available for communication.

There's much more to human interaction than lexical communications, yes - but we're talking about lexical communications here, so anything else is totally irrelevant. You can't have any more than lexical communication by radio.

But tell bees that their dancing is just raw data. Then translate a bee dance for me, blind man.

Maybe the point was that a lot of us who can read CW should wear their

If that's true, it's certainly a change from half a century ago when we HF hams observed the VHF/UHF hams revolutionizing amateur radio with their technical expertise.

Not at all. As usual, SC is again proving he is a bitter little man.

Contrary to Blow Code's fantasies, "the reports of my demise have been exaggerated." [more or less a quote of Samuel Clemens]

I've never had a heart attack, have never died. Now quit imagining things that haven't happened. If you keep on, the new moderating team may make you sit in the corner.

No, there are thousands and thousands of us who want to eliminate the US amateur radio code test for any license. It isn't confined to Jim-"Opus".

Go read ALL the comments to last year's NPRM from the FCC. I did. Can you?

If you look real close you will see that the FCC doesn't think that the code test is necessary for their needs in determining which amateur applicant should get a license. It didn't in 1990, it didn't in 1998, it didn't in 2004.

The rewrite of Radio Regulation S25 at WRC-03 eliminated the international need for all administrations to test for radiotelegraphy for privileges below 30 MHz. It is optional to include or exclude by all administrations. The International Amateur Radio Union wanted that rewrite. The ARRL did NOT. The IARU won.

> Many people can't >see any merit in knowing the laws or in having any technical >knowledge, so why not eliminate testing altogether?

Illogical, incosistent reasoning. The discussion is about the radiotelegraphy test, a stand-alone test solely for manual radiotelegraphy. It is NOT about the written test elements so why mention them? [rhetorical question]

You MUST mention the writtens as somehow "related" but it never was. It's a common ploy by pro-coders but still irrelevant.

>Because you want your views to determine what's done. No other cogent >reason.

Tsk, tsk, tsk. Insulting insinuation there. Bad form.

Tsk, tsk, tsk, more insulting insinuation of alleged "bad conduct." :-)

>You want to get on the air code-free, use the no code bands - CB.

There is only one "CB band." It requires NO TEST at all. Never has. :-)

>You want to get on frequencies that allow code?

I've been on many, many "frequencies" that didn't require radiotelegraphy, either in use or to obtain a license to operate. Got one of those licenses in 1956.

>Pass a code test. It's not rocket science.

It's unnecessary and certainly NOT a "science." :-)

The only agency in the USA that grants amateur radio licenses is the FCC and they don't think the code test proves anything to them insofar as granting any amateur radio license.

>Why should that matter to the FCC?

Ahem, the FCC is the ONLY agency that grants amateur radio licenses in the USA.

>As I said, you're not >qualified to discuss something you have absolutely no understanding of
>- let alone make decisions about it for others.

Klein, you are now violating the general to-be rules of moderation.

Jim-"Opus" is a Canadian. He is licensed under the jurisdiction of Industry Canada, NOT the FCC. That is his ONLY "qualification for exemption" in any discussions about what the FCC does or may do.

YOU, on the other hand, NOT being IN the FCC, cannot legally "make decisions about (the code test) it for others." That decision is up the FCC.

What YOU seem to want to do is force everyone current and future to take that code test...because you had to take a code test...and you want to "get even." :-)

>You can use your voice on voice bands - called CB.

Incorrect. There is the Maritime Radio Service. There is the Aeronautical Radio Service. There is the Private Land Mobile Radio Service. There is the little Citizens Band Radio Service. All have bands below 30 MHz and all allow voice. [I've been on all of them] It isn't restricted to just CB.

>That's what CB is >for - communications for those who don't want to pass a ham test

>(which includes CW). Like you.

Now, now, lets not get testy there old timer. Citizens Band Radio Service was established in the USA in 1958, 46 years ago...as a general-purpose, short-range communications band that would suit the general citizenry. It required NO test whatsoever back then, still doesn't require any test. CB has changed, enlarged in the following 46 years and the number of users outnumber all licensed USA radio amateurs by at least 4:1. [with no licensing for decades, only gross numbers of unsers are possible through sales records such as EIA reports]

I believe that Canada has their own CB. Many countries do. That is irrelevant to the retention or elimination to the radiotelegraphy test for USA radio amateurs.

Now be nice and behave in here or the moderator team to be might make you sit in the corner.

Shalom,

LenAnderson@ieee.org

You never EVER offer any counterpoints. Are you a typical ham? If so, then let the ARS die with dignity.

Nonsense. ALL cats (especially domesticated ones) have POOR vision. They are scent-oriented.

If you've had cats at all you would realize this.

Now why are you gabbling about biological subjects in an amateur radio policy newsgroup?

Now why are you gabbling about biological subjects in an amateur

Did you get stung while exiting a cat house?

Be nice Klein or the moderator team to be may make you sit in the corner.

   It is the mythical long worm that keeps eating his own tail.  :-)

   May not be spelled exactly right...I don't speak Wormish.

   If Klein wants to post about seeing-eye cats and bees in the "Code Reader Recommendation" thread, I can describe worms.  :-)

When will CB have the same power and range as ham radio? When it does, I'll go back.

CB is dead, quit using the term "CB" like an insult. It is short range and therefore not a comparison.

I never expected to find a worm in the bottom of a tequila bottle.  I expected to find Robeswine there.

Try to keep up. I have been quite consistent. You have not being paying attention. I made no argument against voice at all. I made the argument that a live voice conveys more than just words. Again, try to keep up.

Never had a cat, did you? I grew up with them. They don't depend on smell near as much as dogs but they depend on it just the same.

Are we on the radio right now? Your apples and oranges arguments are getting tiresome. Here in Usenet, the text is preserved. CW is not.
Text on usenet is easily saved for future consideration. Is CW saved on a radio server for others to listen to and reply to at their leisure?

Don't be so obtuse. I NEVER said that I would get the proper information. I said "SOME" information..look above. If I understood Ukrainian then I would get the full message. If she spoke the same words in monotone English then I would not likely grasp the degree of anger at what I had or had not done.

Not a good analogy. I can still hear the CW. I just don't know the meaning. Your analogy is more like trying to describe CW to a deaf person.

With CW, yes. Raw data plus inflection conveys a fuller conversation.

Oh bull! You get less than you can in person, true, but much more with an angry or happy voice than with code.

>But tell bees that their dancing is just raw data. Then translate a

This is relevant how?

Vocal communication is never just a conveyance of information but you insist that's all that ham radio is.

Funny.  I haven't followed this thread, but "Opus" would be a screen

I wouldn't worry about that too much. just be careful of some of the advice well, Dyslexia often affects the interconnection of the visual processing centers with that of visual pattern recognition. I know, I have that problem myself.

Since this problem appears to be one in the visual side of the system, it stands to reason that sound would not be affected in the same way (nor would touch - in my case, braille is far easier for me to read than the printed word was). CW is much the same way for me. I picked it up as a teen, but never did get around to using it, nor did I bother with it when I went in to take my first Amateur radio exame.

you may note how well I type. Actually, its an automatic spell checker correcting some of the "dyslexic typing" my fingers turn out. There are some word variations that still get past the spellcheck though. :(

point is, since CW is a sound language, it might be loads easier for her to learn than say the printed word.

   Yes.  In the USA at least.

Since the inception of the no-code Technician class here in 1991, the growth of the Technician class license numbers in the USA has been continuous. Those now comprise about 49 % of ALL licensees. The Technician class license numbers are twice that of General class, the next-largest license class.

Since the "reconstruction" in FCC amateur radio regulations of 2001, the number of licensees grew to peak in July, 2003. At that time the maximum code test rate was fixed at 5 WPM, all classes.

A problem now is the attrition of the older licensees. More old-timers are leaving/expiring (their licenses) than are being replaced by new (never before licensed in amateur radio) licensees. Source: www.hamdata.com. That trend has persisted for three years.

The code test is not THE factor causing it, just one of the major factors in slowing the increase of new licensees. Coupled with the stubborn resistance to change of ANY regulations by olde-tymers, there is little incentive to enter olde-tyme amateur radio. Ally that with the huge growth of the Internet in the 15 years it has been public - an Internet that has spread worldwide with near-instant communications over that world - and the traditional standards and practices of olde-tyme ham radio just don't have the appeal to newcomers they once had.

Elimination of the code test for any license will cause a spurt in new licensees. While such elimination is not a guarantee to far-future growth, it will be the significant act to being CHANGING regulations to better fit the modern times. Keeping up with changing times is a NECESSITY in regulations, regardless of the personal desires of the minority of amateurs making up the olde-tyme group.

<markie_morgan_rapesboys@yahoo.com> spake thusly:

<snip much childish ranting and issue avoiding>

You and your ilk have done nothing but hurl big baby childish insults and laughable innuendo.

Trolls like you are fun to play with but get boring real fast. You're not even a good troll. Lets check the meter:

     ____________
    |0\||||||||10|
    |  \         |
    |   \        |
    |    \       |
    |     \      |
    |_____*______|
     Troll-O-Meter

Not even worthy of a small flame.

sigh what even happened to the good trolls from the days of yore?

Shouldn't you be hiding under a bridge somewhere stealing children?

Don't you have some offs to fuck?

Time for an oldie but a goodie:

You know what? You're clueless, son! Completely clueless!
You wouldn't have a clue if somebody faxed it to you.
You couldn't catch a clue if you stripped naked and soaked your pallid hide in clue musk, then did the clue mating dance in a field full of horny clues during the height of clue mating season!

What meaning do you expect your delusional self-important statements of unknowing, inexperienced opinion to have with us? What fantasy do you hold that you would believe that your tiny-fisted tantrums would have more weight than that of a leprous desert rat, spinning rabidly in a circle, waiting for the bite of the snake?

I cannot believe how incredibly stupid you are. I mean rock-hard stupid. Dehydrated-rock-hard stupid. Stupid so stupid that it goes way beyond the stupid we know into a whole different dimension of stupid. You are trans-stupid stupid. Meta-stupid. Stupid collapsed on itself so far that even the neutrons have collapsed. Stupid gotten so dense that no intellect can escape. Singularity stupid. Blazing hot mid-day sun on Mercury stupid. You emit more stupid in one second than our entire galaxy emits in a year. Quasar stupid. Your writing has to be a troll. Nothing in our universe can really be this stupid.
Perhaps this is some primordial fragment from the original big bang of stupid. Some pure essence of a stupid so uncontaminated by anything else as to be beyond the laws of physics that we know. I'm sorry. I can't go on. This is an epiphany of stupid for me.

Welcome to the killfile. Go ahead and rant and rave about how you don't care that I killfiled you.

I payed OVER $500 for this scanner, recently the same radio went for OVER $500 on Ebay. I don't know the condition of yours, but mine is
Have Fun..

Ok here it is, after NUMEROUS scanners/receivers owned and many hours of listening, I have come to a conclusion. The Pro-2006 with the OC456 full and the Probe v7 software is the BEST PC OPERATED SCANNER EVER MADE!! What a spooky combo this is! Lighting fast scanning,DTMF tone decoder, sensitive and selective, discriminator tap. But wait it gets better, PROBE v7!! If you haven't witnessed the POWER of probe, do yourself a favor and check out the reviews. WOW! The hype IS justified. No scanning software comes close! Ok, analog scanners are out right? WRONG! With a discriminator tap you can decode TONS of digital sigs. There are LOTS of FREEWARE programs out there! Now, lets move on to the condition of the equipment. On a scale from 1 to 10, I give it a 9.5! EVERYTHING WORKS on this baby! Here is what you get: PRO2006, ANTENNA, MANUAL,PROBE V7, SERIAL CABLE!! This is a KILLER scanner!! Check out the info on this rig! http://userweb.suscom.net/~pro-2006/

You claimed that we humans communicate visually more than by words. You're contradicting yourself here.

When you blather on about something you know nothing about you lose track of what you said a few days ago.

She's 7 years old now, and sleeping on my bed. Got her when her mother died - she was still nursing - so, yes, I currently have a cat. Have had some canine or feline pet since before I can remember - usually more than 1.

They use it - about as much as we do - they don't depend on it.

You're arguing for the visual now? Voice conveys more than CW, which is your argument against CW. Voice conveys more than Usenet, which ISN'T an argument against Usenet.

So which is it? Is the fact that voice conveys more than X an argument against X or not?

I'm getting tired of your "I have to argue just so that I can win" stance, so figure out how to get back to me when you grow up.

Let this that be a lesson to you CB'ers. Never tease someone that's got a

The 30 Steps below will help all No-Code Hams, it will also help you to find others just like yourself. These 30 steps should also be added to the present writtens.

Step One: Use as many "Q" signals as possible. Yes, I know they were invented solely for CW and are totally inappropriate for two meter FM, but they are fun and entertaining. They keep people guessing as to what you really meant. I.E. "I'm going to QSY to the phone." Can you really change frequencies to the phone? QSL used to mean, "I am acknowledging receipt", but now it appears to mean, "yes" or "OK". I guess I missed it when the ARRL changed the meaning. It is also best to use "OK" and "QSL" together. Redundancy is the better part of Lid-dom.

Step Two: Never laugh when you can say "HI HI". No one will ever know you aren't a long time CW rag-chewer if you don't tell them. They'll think you've been on since the days of Marconi.

Step Three: Utilize an alternative vocabulary. Use words like "destinated" and "negatory". It's OK to make up your own words here. I.E. "Yeah Tom, I "pheelbart zaphonix" occasionally myself."

Step Four: Always say "XX4XXX" (Insert your own call) "for I.D." As mentioned in Step One, anything that creates redundancy is always encouraged. That's why we have the Department of Redundancy Department. (Please note that you can follow your call with "for identification purposes" instead of "for I.D." While taking longer to say, it is worth more "LID points".

Step Five: The better the copy on two meter FM, the more you should use phonetics. Names should be especially used if they are short or common ones. I.E. "My name is Al... Alpha Lima" or "Jack.. Juliet Alpha Charlie Kilo." If at all possible use the less common HF phonetics "A4SM... America, Number Four, Sugar Mexico." And for maximum "LID points", make up unintelligible phonetics. "My name is Bob... Billibong Oregano Bumperpool."

Step Six: Always give the calls of yourself and everyone who is (or has been) in the group, whether they are still there or not. While this has been unnecessary for years, it is still a great memory test. You may also use "and the group" if you are an "old timer" or just have a bad memory. Extra points for saying everyone's call and then clearing in a silly way "K2PKK, Chow, Chow."

Step Seven: Whenever possible, use the wrong terminology. It keeps people guessing. Use "modulation" when you mean "deviation", and vice-versa.

Step Eight: If someone asks for a break, always finish your turn, taking as long as possible before turning it over. Whenever possible, pass it around a few times first. This will discourage the breaker, and if it is an emergency, encourage him to switch to another repeater and not bother you.

Step Nine: Always ask involved questions of the person who is trying to sign out. Never let him get by with just a "yes" or "no" answer. Make it a question that will take him a long time to answer.

Step Ten: The less you know on a subject, the more you should speculate about it in the roundtable. Also the amount of time you spend on the subject should be inversely proportionate to your knowledge of the subject even though you have no damn clue.

Step Eleven: Always make sure you try to communicate with only a handheld and a rubber duck antenna. Also, make sure you work through a repeater that you can hear very well, but it cannot hear you. This will put out a kind of "LID mating call": "Well, Joe, I can hear the repeater just fine here. I wonder why it can't hear me?" You will score maximum LID points if you are mobile, and with the radio lying in the passenger seat.

Step Twelve: If you hear two amateurs start a conversation, wait until they are twenty seconds into their contact, and then break in to make a call, or better yet to use the auto-patch. Make sure you keep the repeater tied up for at least three minutes. This way, once the two have re-established contact, they won't even remember what they were talking about.

Step Thirteen: You hear someone on the repeater giving directions to a visiting amateur. Even if the directions are good, make sure you break in with your own "alternate route but better way to get there" version. This is most effective with several other "would-be LIDs", each giving a different route. By the time the visiting amateur unscrambles all the street names whizzing by in his mind, he should have moved out of the range of the repeater. This keeps you from having to stick around to help the guy get back out of town, later.

Step Fourteen: If an annoying station is bothering you, make sure your other "LID" buddies have a "coded" frequency list. Even though "CODES" are strictly forbidden on Amateur Radio, it's really neat to practice "James Bond" tactics.

Step Fifteen: Always use the National Calling Frequency for general conversations. The more uninteresting, the longer you should use it. Extra points are awarded if you have recently move from an adjacent frequency for no reason. Make sure when DX is "rolling" in on 52.525 that you hang out there and talk to your friends five miles down the road about the good old CB days!

Step Sixteen: Make sure that if you have a personal problem with someone, you should voice your opinion in a public forum, especially a net. Make sure you give their name, call, and any other identifying remarks. For maximum points, make sure the person in question is not on the repeater, or not available.

Step Seventeen: Make sure you say the first few words of each transmission twice, especially if it is the same thing each time. Like "roger, roger" or "fine business, fine business". I cannot stress enough about encouraging redundancy.

Step Eighteen: If you hear a conversation on a local repeater, break in and ask how each station is receiving you. Of course they will only see the signal of the repeater you are using, but it's that magic moment when you can find a fellow "LID", and get the report. Extra points are awarded if you are using a base station, and the repeater is less than twenty-five air miles from you.

Step Nineteen: Use the repeater for an hour or two at a time, preventing others from using it. Better yet, do it on a daily basis. Your quest is to make people so sick of hearing your voice every time they turn on their radio, they'll move to another frequency. This way you'll lighten the load on the repeater, leaving even more time for you to talk on it.

Step Twenty: See just how much flutter you can generate by operating at handheld power levels too far away from the repeater. Engage people in conversations when you know they wont be able to copy half of what your saying. Even when they say your uncopyable, continue to string them along by making further transmissions. See just how frustrated you can make the other amateur before he finally signs off in disgust.

Step Twenty One: Use lots of radio jargon. After all, it makes you feel important using words ordinary people don't say. Who cares if it makes you sound like you just fell off Channel 19 on the citizen's Band? Use phrases such as "Roger on that", "10-4", "I'm on the side", "Your making the trip" and "Negatory on that".

Step Twenty Two: Use excessive microphone gain. See just how loud you can make your audio. Make sure the audio gain is so high that other amateurs can hear any bugs crawling on your floor. If mobile, make sure the wind noise is loud enough that others have to strain to pick your words out from all the racket.

Step Twenty Three: Start every transmission with the word "Roger" or "QSL". Sure, you don't need to acknowledge that you received the other transmission in full. After all, you would simply ask for a repeat if you missed something. But consider it your gift to the other amateur to give him solace every few seconds that his transmissions are being received.

Step Twenty Four: When looking for a contact on a repeater, always say your "listening" or "monitoring" multiple times. I've always found that at least a half dozen times or so is good. Repeating your multiple "listening" ID's every 10 to 15 seconds is even better. Those people who didn't want to talk to you will eventually call you, hoping you'll go away after you have finally made a contact.

Step Twenty Five: Always use a repeater, even if you can work the other station easily on simplex ... especially if you can make the contact on simplex. The coverage of the repeater you use should be inversely proportional to your distance from the other station.

Step Twenty Six: When on repeaters using courtesy tones, you should always say "over". Courtesy tones are designed to let everyone know when you have unkeyed but don't let that stop you. Say "over", "back to you" or "go ahead". It serves no useful purpose but don't worry, it's still fun!

Step Twenty Seven: Use the repeater's autopatch for frivolous routine calls... especially during morning or evening commute times. While pulling into the neighborhood, call home to let them know you'll be there in two minutes.... or, call your spouse to complain about the bad day you had at work. After all, the club has "measured rate" service on their phone line so they get charged for each autopatch call. Your endeavor is to make so many patches in a year that you cost the club at least $20 in phone bills. That way you'll feel you got your money's worth for your dues!

Step Twenty Eight: Never say "My name is ....." It makes you sound human. If at all possible, use one of the following phrases: a) "The personal here is ..." b) "The handle here is..."

Step Twenty Nine: Use "73" and "88" incorrectly. Both are already considered plural, but add a "s" to the end anyway. Say "73's" or "88's". Who cares if it means "best regards" and "love and kisses." Better yet, say "seventy thirds"! (By the way, seventy thirds equals about 23.3).

Step Thirty: If the repeater is off the air for service, complain about the fact that it was off the air as soon as it's turned back on. Act as though your entire day has been ruined because the repeater wasn't available when you wanted to use it. Even thought you have never paid a penny to help out with the upkeep of it.

Asking you to keep up is not an attack. Telling me to grow up certainly is and you have done that several times.

This shows that you have not kept up. I did not say that we communicate visually more, I said that we are get the most information from our environment visually than by any other sense. Our other senses help us much less than they do for most other higher animals.

Yet again you attack.

Each olfactory cell in a cat has about 40 cilia while a human cell has only about 6 to 8. A cat has approximately 60 to 80 million olfactory cells while a human has about 5 to 20 million. Dogs put us all to shame.

How many times do I have to tell you that I am not arguing against CW? It has it's place but I am arguing against CW as a requirement for full access to ARS. I ask what is so great about CW and all I seem to get is a rather patronizing "You wouldn't understand".

>So which is it? Is the fact that voice conveys more than X an

This again shows how you have not been keeping up. Not an attack, an observation.

>I'm getting tired of your "I have to argue just so that I can win"
>stance, so figure out how to get back to me when you grow up.

Explain how I have to "grow up" and, while you are at it, explain how you are qualified to make such a statement. You have insulted me in such a manner several times yet I have said nothing of the sort to you. You patronize me while I give legitimate arguments. You don't like my arguments and try to deflect by misquoting.

Of all the pro-coders here, I had the most respect for your view. I didn't agree but at least you made a point without the typical insults of others here. Now you seem to be joining their ilk.

Sad.

I lost a hard drive.
Anyone have a copy?

It's for bill Cheeks scanner interface. He's been out of business for over three years so I'm sure it's public domain by now...

thanks,
tom

Nice strawman. The pixels form a full complete picture. Beeps are just beeps. One dimensional. That they form a recognizable pattern does not make them more. Humans are highly visual creatures. I have listened to code for years. Being able to make out a few letters does nothing for me.

It's just plain dull.

Made Extra in 1995 and had to do 20wpm. I did it and have NEVER used CW since and have no intention to ever do so..even if "someone is dying!"
IMHO it is an outdated requirement and will/should be dropped altogether very very soon....

Don't worry, you've had the rep for at least the past six years.
Nothing's changed of late, except for Wabbit trying to use AUK to bash Mark (who won the GK because he was a fucking boring k00k, not because AUK was catering to Woger/Woger's copycat). On that note:

4. What's this newsgroup (AUK) NOT for?

This group exists for recreational Kookology, not for Very Personal
^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^
Vendetta. It is not to be used for general harassment of someone, or for
^^^^^^
net abuse such as spamming and flooding and cancelbombing in an attempt to gain vengeance on someone or get the denizens of AUK to shut up.
Either way, it won't work, it's very messy, "Bob" will give you triple your money back, and you don't get a life.

Also, we [tinw] are not in the business of harassing the vulnerable or the insane. Occasionally an apparent net.kook proves to be genuinely ill. In such cases the person is disqualified from winning awards and other posters are asked to avoid exacerbating his or her problems.
Similarly, trolling or kook-hunting in support groups is strongly discouraged.

I'd like to talk about building a 6 meter homebrew rig.  You got any info, expertise, or pointers for me in that band?

You like to talk about morse code. Last I checked Ham Radio was alive and well.

Been playing with it a little but concentrating more on the theory right now. I knew it well in Boy Scouts 25 years ago. Taking that test in 2 weeks.

Code isn't hard. I was fleunt in code as a 12 year old in Boy Scouts along with most of the troop.   We sent code back and forth by flashlight from tent to tent when we should have been asleep. When we got older and didn't have to go to bed at 10 o'clock we just used words.

Liar, you probably wear your homade Star Trek uniform and your Spock ears as you post.
The only point is on top of your empty head, Trekkie.

And Chris loved it when the Scoutmaster payed his tent a visit late at night, too!

   Blowcode can, in his small mind's imagination, do all sorts of things.

   Here's a "plain and simple fact" of possible probables in case of anyone ACTUALLY dying or needing help:

1. By telephone, wired or cell: Dial 911, the universal, manned 24/7 emergency number. In turn, the 911 operator will communicate with the appropriate agency by wire or radio (there are 3 basic radio bands for public safety radio services in the USA, one more coming). There is one cell phone for every three citizens in the USA. Speed as fast as a 911 conversation.

2. By - gasp - Citizens Band Radio Service transceivers in urban areas. CB radio users out-number amateurs by 4 to 5 to one. Considering that some radio amateurs have to work for a living and are not AT their ham radios but highway truckers are both working and with their CBs, the virtual ratio is probably double 5:1. Probability of return to first communication about help is high considering that many CB transceivers have guard receivers always tuned to the emergency channel. Speed of that is variable, may take three times longer than a conversation with a 911 operator.

3. If flying there are two basic ways to indicate help. Overland airways routes will have ATCRBS running and a transponder "77" prefix code will generate a flag on the ATC beacon display. On civil airways, 121.5 MHz is the international universal emergency frequency (243 MHz for military radio). Speed of either is a bit longer than with 911 operator calling but quite fast.

4. On the water, in inland waterways and harbors, there is a VHF FM channel for emergencies but common in-use frequencies would get attention for real calls for help. GMDSS is available on ships over deep water as well as an HF radio voice channel for international maritime distress calls. Since maritmers are noted for adherence to SOLAS (Safety Of Life At Sea), the response would be fast.

5. On land, lacking cell coverage (rare now) but on or near highways, there is high probability that any motorist or trucker would have a CB or possibly a business vehicle with a business radio would be passing (PLMRS vehicular radios are quite common with small and large businesses). Any passing public safety agency vehicle would have a radio transceiver capable of directly contacting appropriate help. Farmers are increasing their use of private radios and might be nearby. FRS and GMRS HTs are also becoming more common for both private and business use. Speed of help calling would be variable depending on location, nearby vehicular traffic.

6. Lacking any of the above, one might look for a non-TV or non-CB antenna on a house...high probability of that belonging to a radio amateur. [such a search could take many hours, though] If the date and time corresponded to a ham contest time, the ham might not respond quickly. Even if the ham responded and began calling, there is no assurance that anyone would hear or pay attention to some emergency plea; that would violate the normal conversation that goes on in ham bands and cause much on-air disputes, further clogging calls for help. Speed of help calling is variable, anything from several minutes to many hours. Not that it matters since the victim already died after trying to get through all the ragchewing, self-styled radio police, and general cat-calling by other amateurs.

7. Blow Code is of NO help since he is not verified as a valid (or invalid) licensed radio amateur.

or you if you had to you could send ing sos or oso the later seems likely to get you aid the fastest from the CW they will df you fast to come and castise you for it and likely then well at least rennder first aid as they take you to task for daring to misspell sos

I think it benifits the ARS by insuring that new hams reconize the term and the rules involved in the ARS don't you think it does that?

Are YOU qualified? We gather more information about our environment from vision than any other sense. Now, that's NOT to say that we have the best vision in the animal kingdom. Our vision is refined and depended on at the expense of our other senses. Ever have a pet cat or dog that was blind and deaf? I have and you would be surprised how well then can adapt with just the sense of smell and touch alone.
Humans need some degree of assistance.

This is an strawman. You know full well what I mean.

I'll tell my daughter's occupational therapist to quit using a monitor screen to teach her how to recognize emotions of people's faces pictured on the screen. After all, I have just been told that you can't view a persons mood by the look on his face if it is composed of pixels on a screen.

>When you actually get into high school, let us know.

That was uncalled for and childish. Your arguments are based on a false premise that I and other want to ban the use of CW or that it is useless. We're only opposed to it being required to pass a test. I question those who say it's as good as a human voice. It isn't and you can't say otherwise. Romanticize it all you want. It is what it is.
Nothing more.

We gather more information from fellow humans by words than by any even written words.

Apples and oranges. Deaf-blind people get along pretty well too, if they're given food, water and all the comforts of home by someone else.

You don't like CW because you can't tell emotions on CW. Since you can't tell emotions on Usenet, you evidently don't like Usenet. Or you're being inconsistent.

That's what this discussion is about, so I guess the grandmother story is just a red herring.

Since I can fully communicate using "emotionless beeps", no.

No you haven't, but you're being told that if you're not being deliberately facetious, you're appearing to be pretty stupid.

The original discussion was about requiring it, not banning it. My attention span's not that short.

So be opposed to testing altogether. Oh, there's already a way to get on the air without a test. You just don't like that way.   Now that's being childish.

How can you question a language you don't even begin to understand?

Sure I can - I understand and use it - you don't, so you can't intelligently discuss what it is or isn't at all.

There is a lot more information in our environment than just raw data.

A blind person cannot sniff his way around as well as a dog or cat, therefore a white cane is needed or an unchanging closed environment.

My turn to say apples and oranges then. Can you quote where I said that I didn't like CW? Basically, I say that it's only good for submitting raw data, like usenet. Didn't say that it was a bad thing, just not a full, complete way to engage in human discourse. It should also not be a barrier to the use of amateur radio.

No that was NOT my point. Let me be more precise: The inflection added by actual voice results in a conversation that is much more than the sum of it's parts, the parts being the words used. My grandmother example simply showed that inflection adds so much more to a conversation that it can, at times, convey some information on it's own without words.

Raw data [text] is all that's needed for this conversation.

You insist on reducing the term "communication" to just an exchange of data. I am trying to point out that there is MUCH more to human interactions than just data.

You're the one who used the term pixels like they are just an exchange of raw data. Technically, the are. But they are much more than the sum of their parts.

The fact that I fully support technical testing is well established.
Others who want to end code testing generally feel the same way. This is well established.

I have already pointed out that you can get much information beyond

Keep on using it then. But don't tell me that I must know it in order to use my voice on the radio.

The ready-built Personal Computer first appeared in 1976, 30 years ago (the "IBM PC" debuted in 1980, 26 years ago). The Internet went public in 1991, 15 years ago. "Restructuring" to drop the morse test rate to 5 WPM for all such tests happened only 6 years ago.

The peak licensing of 737,938 happened on 2 Jul 03, just 3 years ago. [they've been dropping at an average of 7K per year ever since]

I disagree on your reasons stated in your quote above.

>When I ask technical people about why they haven't >acquired an interest in amateur radio, I never get the CW requirement >as a response.

Strange, I hear that response. Having been IN radio-electronics for over a half century, I DO know some "technical people." :-)

Manual radiotelegraphy was a MUST to use early radio as a communications medium. The technology of early radio was primitive, simple, and not yet developed. On-off keying was the ONLY practical way to make it possible to communicate. Morse code was then already mature and a new branch of communications was open to use by downsized landline telegraphers.

> They simply view the whole service as outmoded in the >face of modern telecommunications.

PART of that IS true. NOT all of it.

What IS outmoded (technically) is sitting only on HF and "working" other stations with morse radiotelegraphy. Amateur radio is the ONLY radio service still using morse radiotelegraphy for communications purposes.

Another thing outmoded is the strict "necessity" to use a formalism in "procedure" AS IF it was "professional" radio. That formalism was established between 50 to 70 years ago. Amateur radio, by definition, is NOT professional. Too many olde-tymers want to PRETEND they are pros in front of their ham rigs.

But, there is still an enormous area of the EM spectrum that is still open for experimentation, for just the fun of doing something out of the ordinary above 30 MHz. That can be a very different RF environment, much much different than the technology available in the 20s and 30s. It has exciting possibilities...except for the rutted and mired olde-tymers unable to keep up with new things, secure in their own dreams of youth and simple technological environment.

>Let's face it.. the romance is gone.

Oh, boo hoo...the "romance" of the 1930s is gone? Yes, it IS. The "pioneering of the airwaves" below 30 MHz has been DONE...mostly by the pros of radio (despite what the ARRL claims). DONE a long time ago. The solid-state era came into being about 45 years ago and has revolutionized ALL electronics (radio is a subset of that).

Except as memorabilia trinkets of the past, GONE is the analog VFO, GONE is the one-tube regenerative receiver, GONE is the single-crystal-single-frequency Tx, GONE is the big, bulky AM modulator amplifier, GONE is the not-knowing-when-the-bands-are-open (solar activity and ionosonding solved that and HF MUF is a predictable item that can be found by a computer program). Except for the boatanchor afficionados, vacuum tubes are GONE for nearly everything but high-power transmitters.

The radio world of today is NOT that of 1950, nor of 1960, nor 1970, nor even 1980s. It keeps changing, advancing, the state of the art never static. For the stuck-in-the-mud olde tymers that is terrible...they feel insecure on not being able to keep up, become aggressive to newcomers ("no kids, lids or space cadets") and retreat to the "secure" mode of their youth, "CW." But, they want to make sure They get the respect they feel they've "earned" (as if) so they try and try and try to bring all down to THEIR level...the code test MUST stay..."because."

There are 100 million two-way radios in use in the USA alone, millions more in other countries. Those are the cellular telephones. There are millions of VHF and UHF transceivers in the USA, working daily for public safety agencies, ships, private boats, air carriers as well as private airplanes. There are tens of thousands of HF transceivers in use in the USA, users being everyone from government agencies to private boat owners, ALL exclusive of amateur radio users. Where is the "romance" in all this Plenty from a cornucopia that all have grabbed? It is GONE, yes.

But, NEW "romances" await. DIFFERENT ones, I'd say a helluva lot more complex than old, simple "radio." We can't relive old "romances" except in our minds and we can't grow physically younger. Only person-to-person romance is TRUE, the other "romance" is of the imagination, of the fantasy of what was once there. This fantasy "romance" can't be brought back. It can't be legislated into remaining static. The rules and regulations have to change to keep up with the NOW.

If you really are an amateur operator, why can't you give out your license callsign?

How DOES one have a "reasoned debate" with an anony-mousie such as "Nada Tapu"?

I've not seen that such is possible in here except for two and both of them are self-admitted Canadians.

a nice peice of writing stored I may lift a peice or for something I am working on

but yes their is still magaic I play with it (although yes acess to HF would be a help as I learn the ins and out of EME and other VHF+ modes pity that progress in the ARS is opposed at every turn by hams

Thank you. Feel free to use any part. I would be nice to get credit for it, a common courtesy.

"Magic" is a subjective term. The "magic" of HF worldwide comms dissolved into reality for me in 1953 on seeing such wholesale "magic" working 24/7 in tying US Army (and other military) into the large network going back to the states.

"Different strokes for different folks."

ARRL is still fixated on HF and the "magic" of morse. Since they influence (if not brainwash) as many US hams as they can with their huge publishing effort, we aren't supposed to negatively critique them. That's "not nice" to those who've had their brains washed in that way.

I've seen "real" magic at the Magic Castle in Hollywood, CA. That's mainly a professional association of magicians/illusionists. One can't gain entrance without being admitted by a member. I've had the marvelous opportunity to go in three times there...and be totally fascinated by the illusions. Whenever I see some ham bring up "magic" I think of the Magic Castle. A lot of hams ascribe "magic" to HF comms but that is their own private illusion (or delusion, as the case may be). Shrug. To each his own but I don't like others trying to cram Their delusions into everyone.

Probably because it's not safe to go waving around more information than you have to.

Dispute On CB Airwaves Leads To Fatal Shooting

Yes, the non-CB amateur bands tend to be a little more mature than the citizens band (or at least as far as the Washington/Clark/Multnomah/Clackamas County area is concerned). Unfortunately, Usenet and the Internet are not. If you don't believe me, go watch Dateline when they sting Internet weirdos sometime to see the worst of them.

Actually Len, almost all amateur radio operation has been outmoded by advancing technology which has made amateur radio first to be redundant and later to be obsolete. I'm still using the same modes for amateur radio that I used more than half a century ago.

My daughter lives in New York state. 50 years ago, I would have tried to talk her into getting a ham license. Today, Sprint cellphones allow the two of us to communicate any time, day or night, for free.

These are serious questions I have of CW operation, with no harm, malice, hurt, or put-downs intended for anyone, so I hope this thread does not degrade to that point.

When listening to CW on my scanner, are there any tell-tale indications that the operator is dyslexic? Does a dyslexic ham use the same speed, protocol and " short-hand/short-form wording " as a more proficient ham would use in communicating CW? Do dyslexic hams ever really use CW, or would dyslexic hams ever even consider the use of CW on a regular basis? Are dyslexic would-be hams able to pass the CW portion of an exam to get into a higher class of license and increased privileges?

I meant these as very real and serious questions. I have a dyslexic daughter which I'm still trying to comprehend and understand by trying to view reality as she sees it. Wifey and I are somewhat still feeling guilty of having eroded her self-esteem when we were raising her by using usual methods of discipline when she screwed-up excessively, until we finally realized that there was a very real problem that needed dealing with, but in non-usual ways. This is 25 years later, and I still feel like shit about the situation and go way out of my usual way to help her without making the other 3 siblings feel left out, so maybe we should lighten up on some of the dyslexic guys/gals in these newsgroups for having the balls to be here in the first place, let alone wanting to communicate with those who do not have a dyslexia problem.

More power to the dyslexics...I think they should be made to feel welcome. The crappy name-calling should stop, though.

Jack

some are able to dylexia comes in degrees not all dyslexics are afected to same degree

OTOH I know of No dyslexic ham that has been able to USE CW onnthe air without being roundly flamed by the other users of CW

The two of you jerks have made a cesspool out of .misc and .policy. Take this crap to the sewer you have made for yourselves and don't foul this nest with your rantings and ravings.

To the op, I realize the question was asked in sincerity, and I don't have a good answer.

...Nope..." high " was the last word, and I left out a " dot " on the last " h " to make it an " s " as in " higs " instead of " high " .  Just testing to see if anyone out there cared enough about CW at all to catch that...Proved my point, I guess  :)  :)  :)

That is true in essence for all those who "work DX on HF with CW."   :-)

Some will point to modern techniques in radio (DDS, PLL frequency control, solid-state PAs that need no tuning controls, etc.) as being advancements. Trouble is, those advancements came from the designers-manufacturers, advancements to capture market share of ham consumer electronics. Using only on-off keying with a state-of-the-art transceiver seems a waste of available resources in that equipment.

One in three Americans has a cell phone now according to the US Census Bureau. Each cell phone is basically a little two-way radio.

No "CW" test is needed to use a cell phone. :-)

I just completed an exchange of files (including hi-resolution photographs) this morning with another in Europe. Took only a few minutes. The Internet stretches over most of the globe, is unaffected by any ionospheric variation. Those files couldn't be exchanged via "CW" on HF. [maybe the "phase shift" impairs such information transfer...:-)]

No "CW" test is needed to use the Internet.   :-)

But, in 2006 the FCC regulations still require any radio amateur to test for "CW" in order to operate on bands below 30 MHz. None of the other radio services require that. <shrug>

Heh. But, in here, coders are the only ones with "facts." Anything a no-coder says is "wrong," "in error" and other endearments. :-)

True enough. But...the coders HAVE their rank-status-privileges and seem to enjoy looking down on no-coders.

All must do as they did or be called "wrong" or "in error."

Early radio was just a telegraph system without poles and wires between stations. Mythical tales have turned early radio into something greater than rocket science.

Ah, yes, the Great 500 KHz "Experiment." AS IF the 500 KHz region hasn't ALREADY had 80 years plus of determining whether or not it works for communications!   :-)

Good old League, leading all "Back to the Future." :-)

It's about the same as those who love to Re-Enact the American Civil War or the American Revolutionary War.
Play-acting at "pioneering" over 8 decades after that frequency region was picked for the first maritime distress and safety reserved frequency.

"Ore" from a mine. The pro-coders say "I've got mine, nya-nya."

It's getting to be "Back to the Future, Part Infinity" if things like the Great 500 KHz Experiment is a sign of things to come from the "representative of all amateurs" in Newington.

Their other "Experiment" is a "contest" to see who can best come up with a whole ham station for LESS than $50 in new part costs. Whoever "wins" that gets a really hefty prize of $100 cash and Publication in QST! Oh, and it is 40 meters only, but "allows" SSB voice to be included. :-)

CW is my favorite mode. I'm a member of FISTS (8741).
Strange that I helped design the 8741 at Intel, huh?

Vanilla Bean ice cream is my favorite ice cream. But I wouldn't dream of forcing my favorite ice cream on anyone else, including my fellow amateur radio operators. QSL?

some dylesxic do manage to pass. I know of No dylexic ham that use CW on air at all, at least not for very long

MyselfI used to operate it using keyboard provide code paractice for some friends (anyone that can follow my typing rendered in CW) can pass a test at the same speed some of simply get used to it, and feel frankly a duty to do so some don't have the strengh I understand that as well

it will not stop the name calling is the only that gives the callers any sense they are alive . It reveals them as as sick and pathetic people that they are my foes in the NG and that giving them a target to attack this way aids (I feel) my cause in the NG is an interesting bonus

So is speech. So is writing. Communication between beings is raw data. It only conveys meaning to those who understand it.

All communication is the exchange of raw data.

But you're being inconsistent. You only want to eliminate code testing because YOU can't see any merit in code. Many people can't see any merit in knowing the laws or in having any technical knowledge, so why not eliminate testing altogether?

Because you want your views to determine what's done. No other cogent reason.

>Others who want to end code testing generally feel the same way. This

Yes, it is. They want everything done the way they want it - just like you.

You want to get on the air code-free, use the no code bands - CB. You want to get on frequencies that allow code? Pass a code test. It's not rocket science.

To you. Why should that matter to the FCC? As I said, you're not qualified to discuss something you have absolutely no understanding of
- let alone make decisions about it for others.

>Keep on using it then. But don't tell me that I must know it in order >to use my voice on the radio.

You can use your voice on voice bands - called CB. That's what CB is for - communications for those who don't want to pass a ham test (which includes CW). Like you.

Long ago the FCC thought this might be a problem, so that's why they came up with CB. You're welcome to CB, Talk all you want on it.

It's funny, and most telling.  The no-code hams have everything over 30
MHz, but it's the code hams that are the one's moving ham radio forward and doing anything technical wise.  I guess the no-coders are still trying to figure things out.

Lenny's life was saved. The shock he got at being told he'd been saved by CW resulted in him having a heart attack, and that killed him.

Not his trolling, his k00kery! Also, your inept attempts at net.KKKopping were a major factor. But it was mainly the k00kery. Homophobia is kooky, you see.

I didn't say I was going to "killfile" you. In fact, I neither nominated you nor seconded your nomination for the Golden Killfile -- I think I voted for you, though that was a tough field (both Tholenator and Warhol!) -- I told you you were nominated for an award that happens to have the word "killfile" in it, meaning you are worthy to be ignored by everyone, not that everyone has to killfile you. Remember, no one ever forced you to x-poast to AUK. You did that all by yourself.

Which is why it was said, for many centuries, I suppose, that it's speech that separates us from the animals. (We're a lot less visually oriented than a lot of other species.)

I have listened to Turkish for years. Being able to make out a few words does nothing for me.

But there are a lot of Turks who feel otherwise.

Your insularity is showing.

No, numbers are decreasing because ham radio has been dumbed down so having a ham license isn't worth anything anymore and people are leaving.

Fortunately today, I couldn't hear your monologue very well, But I noticed you stole some of your grandmothers 78's and are playing them now. ROFL

I'll give you one thing, you got variety. It's sounds shitty, but it's variety.

Lenny, just to help you feel better about morse code, if I ever hear you are dying and in need of help, I will use CW to get you help. Then you'll know before you die a ham used morse code to save a life and you can rest in peace over CW.

Woger is currently nominated for a kook award, and is a very strong contender. I happen to be the one who caused his latest foamdown. How am I the one who has been used?

Code testing is absurd.  The government shouldn't be in the merit badge business.

If you really need a merit badge to hang on the wall, listen to W1AW during a qualifying run....

If you are so in love with this system, why are you selling?

Good luck, the Buy It Now AND starting bid for this package, as good as it might be, is WAY overpriced. If I could get those prices, I'd sell mine!

No, it's dying because of attitudes like yours that scare people away.
Nobody wants to be like you.

Posting in all caps is me YELLING at you to put up or shut up. Your steadfast refusal to do so demonstrates to the world that you have no grasp of the issue being discussed and have resorted to lies to try and make a point when you really had no point to make.

This is no fun anymore. You're just another worthless troll. Mea culpa for not seeing it sooner. My bad.

"Bullshit"???? Are you saying that I am NOT in Canada? Look at the message header. You DO know what a header is..do you? If not, have your mommy or daddy help you by showing you the header and then look for my IP address. With a simple search [mommy or daddy can help you here too] you will discover that I am connected thru Shaw Cable in Edmonton Alberta.

Speech has infection. You can say the same sentence 10 different ways and it can have 10 different meanings depending on the emotion invoked in the speech. You know....the HUMAN element.

Bet you can easily tell what kind of a mood the speaker is in just by his tone. I don't speak Ukrainian but I sure knew when my grandmother was mad at me.

indeed I am certain that all that is keeping some of these hams alive is code thus I am expecting a sudden die off when the R&O come out

I can tell that on the air too - in CW. I can't tell it here, so I

Not by her words, though, which is what you're claiming. So tell me, what mood am I in at the moment? Evidently, since Usenet is a visual medium, you can tell.

Or you just don't know what you're talking about.

The R&O may come after global warming has already killed most of us off. Here's what Al Gore had to say quoting from The DrudgeReport:

Former U.S. Vice President Al Gore warned: "Cigarette smoking is a significant contributor to global warming!"
